

Diablo 4 in development

The game is being developed under the codename "Fenris", with "Embrace the Darkness" as its tagline. <https://digit.in/dec18-60-1>

Pokemon Tamagotchi

A collaboration between the two iconic companies now will allow you to raise a virtual Eevee pet. <https://digit.in/dec18-60-2>

A GUIDE TO THE WIZARDING WORLD OCCUPATIONS

If you were living in the Potterverse, what kind of jobs would you do?

Dhriti Datta | feedback@digit.in

With the recent release of Fantastic Beasts: Crimes of Grindelwald, the Harry Potter universe has gotten exponentially more complex with the addition of multiple plays, books and films. The much-awaited sequel of the Fantastic Beasts franchise follows the quest undertaken by Newt Scamander, a celebrated magizoologist who was a student during this timeline, along with wizarding-world favourite, Albus Dumbledore to thwart Gellert Grindelwald's evil plans of spreading pure-blood wizards' domination over all non-magical beings.

The original Harry Potter books and films already boasted a very extensive lowdown of magical occupations or careers only to be further convoluted by the addition of a brand new franchise. Despite the occupations being inherent to the wizarding world created by J. K. Rowling, they possess some striking similarities to numerous occupations in our world (the 'muggle' world).

AUROR

This wizarding world occupation is possibly one of the most coveted professions in the Potterverse, ever since Harry Potter expressed his interest in this dangerous profession. An Auror is essentially a dark-wizard catcher. The counterpart to Aurors in the Muggle world would be police officers and the military.

The Aurors usually perform their responsibilities depending on the magical education they have been privy to and the kind of threats and concerns they are trained to combat.

As Minerva McGonagall said in the books: the requirements to become an Auror entail studying and mastering a minimum of five N.E.W.T. (Nastily Exhausting Wizarding Test) subjects. Following this, the applicant will go through a host of character and aptitude tests conducted at the Auror office. The requirements were completely forgone after the completion of the Second Wizarding War.

MAGICAL LAW ENFORCEMENT WORKERS*

The employees of the Department of Magical Law Enforcement work under numerous subdivisions where they work towards upholding the wizarding laws. All other departments in the Ministry of Magic are answerable to the Department of Magical Law Enforcement which grants its head with great power. Harry Potter, the former Head Auror, went on to head this department by 2019. Hermione Granger also was the Deputy Head of the Department of Magical Law Enforcement and she partnered up with Kingsley Shacklebolt to eradicate some of the regressive, oppressive and biased laws that were mostly in favour of the pure-bloods.

The 'Muggle' equivalent of Magical Law Enforcement workers would be lawyers, since they endorse and champion the laws of our world. The Department of Magical Law Enforcement's counterpart in our world would be the justice system comprised of judges, courts, jurors and other such officials and departments.

