Here we are at the end of yet another year and not a lot has changed. Each month brings its own share of challenges and no matter how prepared we are, there's always that random element which acts as a key to a Pandora's Box. So yeah, this month was one for the record books as well. We've never had as many product packaging pile up in the Test Centre making a royal mess and we've never had a person ditch their assignment and go AWOL at the eleventh hour. Normally, this wouldn't affect us but since this person had a massive 24 pages to their name, the last minute ditch did hit us right in the keister.

To help out with Zero 1, Dhriti, the star intern who had also helped out with the Anniversary issue came back. The wunderkind went about her usual spree dishing out pages left, right and centre. However, Robert did spot a teensy goof-up in one of her articles. According to the budding physicist with a major in astro-bio-asinology, Pa-duh-ma Shri Dr. Dhriti, believes that the stars in the universe began to form 250 years after the big bang. For ordinary folk, this might not appear to be a goof-up at all.

The mistake? Well, it's 250 "million" years later and not just 250. All she did was accelerate the pace of the universe (time) by a factor of 1,000,000. As we said, it's a teeny tiny monstro-OH-MAAAAI-GHAAWD!!!!1 kinda mistake.

This month also saw some new video games launches. Manish busied himself with Fallout 76 which left a really bad taste in his mouth, so bad that when he did play Red Dead Redemption 2, (an awesome game) he rated it poorly.

Mithun had to waterboard the guy to bring him back to his senses. Speaking of Mithun, he wasn't having such a great time either with HITMAN 2. Not that the game is bad but we ended up getting a PS4 copy and he just loves consoles! Since he's awkward with the controller, every now and then you'd see Agent47 run through the centre of the town with 50 soldiers on his tail because his cover was blown.

Aditya, on the other hand, had a gala time with the new Fortuna expansion in Warframe. Should you log in to Warframe anytime soon, you'll find him hunched over a dead spider on the plains of Venus, carefully examining its entrails.

In other news, the rats are back. The Test Centre is now teeming with the great-great-great $\times 10^{43}$ grand kids of Creepicheep. See you folks in 2019!

QUOTE OF THE MONTH

I'm OK with tough love

<https://dgit.in/bgtbnds>

The thread discusses the best fitness trackers available on a budget. There are also posts about replacement bands and spare parts, and where best to get them. Some of these parts were better than the ones that the bands shipped with, in the first place. Compatibility with third party applications are also discussed. The most discussed devices were the offerings from Xiaomi and Huawei.

Lite UPS for desktop

<https://dgit.in/liteups>

Forum member cute.bandar went on a hunt for a small and lite UPS for desktop computers. While there were no available devices in the local market, it is theoretically possible to have such a UPS with a built in battery. While that kind of a device may not be a "thing" yet, there is definitely a local market. The forum users are still in the process of figuring out any available devices.
