by T-Series. People misunderstood his sarcasm and created a negative impression of him. This led to Indians subscribing to T-Series thinking PewDiePie is bad-mouthing Indians.

If we truly believe that an Indian should be at the top of the YouTube kingdom, let's root for some individual creator like Bhuvan Bam or Carry Minati for the spot. Making big companies more powerful for the wrong reasons is harmful in ways we can't imagine. PewDiePie is hosting a live-stream where all the proceeds would be forwarded to CRY

d Hi Aditya, although this battle is still going on, and I didn't want us to take sides, I did want to share your letter with our readers, and also add my personal take on it. I personally found PewDiePie's "bi*ch lasagna" video to be a tad offensive about us Indians, and a little too stereotypical. Personally I'm not subscribed to either PDP or T-Series, so I couldn't care less who has more subscribers (Shameless plug: remember to subscribe to youtube.com/digit). If you read the letter above you, you will realise that we have plenty of talented people in our country who get left behind or feel handicapped because they aren't as fluent in a foreign language as they think they should be. PDP's video was essentially making fun of these very stereotypes, and also making fun of our poverty. Yes of course, many of us don't do ourselves any favours online by acting idiotic with women, so his criticism of that I accept wholeheartedly, but when he makes fun of our languages, despite having a terrible accent himself, it seems stupid. Although I know he meant it as a joke, he should have realised that he had a lot of power, and would only be enabling racists who comment "fk Indians", and call us all "street shi*ters", etc. So no, I do not think everyone should subscribe to PDP or T-series. Instead, yes, donate to CRY (Child Relief and You), or other charities of your choosing. I've personally donated to CRY in the past, and cannot recommend it enough. Also, if you think PDP doesn't make money, think again. He makes about a million dollars a month, so this is and always has been about money at some level.

Letter of the Month

My name is PRAJWAL BANG (yes that's my real surname). I don't have a story of reading Digit forever, or a huge collection to boast about, but I have been reading Digit for the past four months.

Digit is simply great, I just love the articles, the reviews etc. I am preparing for IIT you see and there's lots of studies but when I get tired of them Digit is my source of relief... Now a few simple questions:

Q1. Hey Robert where does all the tech go after you guys review them, do you guys hold like a lucky draw in your office or it goes back to where it came from..

Q2. Why don't you review iBall products.

Maybe you reviewed them in previous issues, but not the last four. I ask because they pay you for advertising.

Please reduce your typos a little bit. On pg 106 (December issue) in Acer Orion 9000 you have written graphics CARS instead of CARDS. On pg 39 you have a misprint in the header, etc.

Can Agent001 review the Sennheiser Street 2 earphones? Also, can you conduct a budget 1 awards (not Zero1) because I can't sell both kidneys to afford a television set of near 3 LAKHS! May the force be with you!

—Prajwal Bang

Nice surname Prajwal. For a first letter this one makes a pretty big bang! I'm glad to hear you like our content, because it means you're getting bang for your buck... OK I'm all out of idioms, and I don't want to continue to bang that drum, so let me get serious before you bang your head against a wall. (I'm only kidding, I mean no offense at all, it's a lovely name).

About your questions, yes most of the products are returned to the companies we get them from. A few stay on to become part of the test centre's gear, usually used to test other stuff. About 95% of stuff goes back almost immediately, while the rest is eventually returned when we have no use for it anymore. No Digit employee gets to keep anything that comes in for testing, and no one is allowed to accept gifts from companies, except some sweets for Diwali. Advertising or not advertising in Digit does not at all influence the editorial staff in any way when it comes to testing products. In fact, our sales staff are not even allowed to speak to our reviewers, and we have maintained this wall of separation very well since we began in 2001. About products, we accept all products from all companies. When they send us stuff to test, we always do test it, and give a totally unbiased rating.

My apologies for the typos, we will try our best to reduce them. Will pass on your request to Agent. As for the Zero1 awards, they're meant to be the very best products money can buy. All through the year we review products in different budgets, and if you have budget requirements that we're not meeting, let us know, and we will try and include those as well. I wish you the best for the JEE, make us all proud!

Robert
