

TV SHOW

Titans

★★★★☆ | DC made a lot of waves when they announced the Titans live-action show back in Summer 2018. Fast forward to January 2019, and the show finally made its way to international shores via Netflix. One of the good things about comic book stories is that the storyteller can tell them the way they see fit and fit it into a genre accordingly. Titans and its characters itself have seen multiple iterations over the years ranging from being a teen-centric show to straight up humour-focussed children's television. DC Titans takes the dark and gritty route with its storyline. While there are numerous references to comic book elements and quite a lot has been borrowed from particular storylines, there are enough things different to merit a judgement beyond a standard comic book vs live-action comparison.

That being said, a lot of things seemed unnecessary in the show. For instance, whatever (visually) happens to Starfire every time she uses her power seems absurd, but hey, that's borderline nitpicking. A more evident issue is that the switch from dark and gritty to cracking jokes can be a bit jarring in some portions of the show. However, that's something likely to be missed in a binge-watch session. The show sets up an interesting ending to the first season, and if anything, we'd say that the entire first season serves as a super-setup for what's coming in season 2.

COMIC BOOK

Shaitan #3

★★★★☆ | We already know that Shaitan is a ruthless, killing machine with enhanced superhuman strength. Only Lieutenant Lena is aware of this fact along with Jo, who is by the way recovering from his almost fatal injuries. Things get a little rough between Shaitan and Red. Both the men get into a fist fight and as soon as Shaitan takes a boxer stance, we're transported to a flashback from the times of the Second World War. In Nazi Germany, Shaitan is seen speaking to a General resembling Netaji Subhash Chandra Bose. Netaji is seen debriefing Shaitan about the objectives of his mission which ultimately ensures the victory of the Germans. And yes, even we were taken aback on reading this and it definitely makes things more interesting. Soon, Shaitan is seen entering a boxing ring with the Fuhrer himself in the audience. Cut back to present and Shaitan pummels Red brutally. However, very soon, Red learns that there's no point in fighting him since he doesn't feel pain at all.

We learn that Red is quite hot-headed and easily loses his temper. Apart from his body, his ego also gets a big beating from Shaitan. The four get back together in search of a way to escape the base and split up to explore the area. After isolating himself with Shaitan, Red shoots at him and is completely dumbfounded to discover that Shaitan is bulletproof. Suddenly, a mysterious voice comes out from a dark corner, revealing himself to be an abomination, someone who Shaitan recognises.
