

4G and 5G security flaws found

Three new security flaws could be used to intercept phone calls and track the locations of cell phone users. <https://digit.in/mar19-71>

Next-gen Xbox consoles

According to a French video game news site Microsoft will announce two Xbox consoles in June. <https://digit.in/mar19-72> was like icing on the cake. I have been a beginner in photo editing & this one really helped me a lot in learning new tricks and features. There is one small request :- Please provide us a Fastrack on Video editing and Windows 10.

-Rohil Hinduja

d Hey Rohil, We have covered these topics in the past. We covered Windows 10 in September 2015 and video editing has been covered on and off on the basis of which application was used. We will be revisiting video editing soon, so stay tuned. Meanwhile, if you want to get your hands on the older FastTrack, simply pre-order the upcoming June 2019 special issue and you'll get the digital versions of all past FastTrack issues for free.

-Mithun

 Sorry I know I am late in submitting this but I just started reading it today and could not stop myself from sharing my feedback. First of all, congratulations on the good work that you guys keep doing. As an avid reader it only encourages and inspires me more to never let go of Digit subscription. I have been associated with this magazine since 2001 and a quiet observer over the years felt that Digit magazine has grown along a concept of learning, sharing knowledge, pragmatically derived from research and has developed a distinguished venerable character to itself which brings its readers the satisfaction of learning. That being said I would like to say that every issue of Digit that I open (I eagerly wait for them to arrive) it is always the editorial which has always been the top of my list to study. The Feb 19 issue had the RSS Feed capture all my attention "Wolves in sheep's clothing" (and I am not being opinionated).

I always knew that it was not only me thinking the way RSS thinks, I also strongly believe that today advertisements govern our emails, browsers, our phones, everything we do on any such screen is being converted in commerce by some big corporation. Sadly, we have no one to blame other than ourselves who have entered in this pragmatic fiction with the belief that we are in control of our choices, when we are being programmed by advertisements into compulsive buying of things we don't need. The RSS feed has strengthened my faith in Digit magazine and I would like to re-assure you RSS that the "idea of morality cannot be outdated". There are still people out there in the world who would continue to be honest and live upright staying true to themselves. The life opinionated about morality have the strongest of ratiocination as its support and I wish team Digit to continue provide us with the super tech advice as it has always been doing. The magazine is doing great it does not need any changes as of now, even if you bring about some changes it will be with the right intention.

The more we are connected, the less we are connecting, idolising people we haven't met, let them influence us into buying things we don't need - It is the modern day Lie that we Live d Thank you for your feedback Gautam. Everything you say is spot on. I only hope we are able to correct ourselves in time and wake up to look past the modern day lie!

-Gautam Dixit

-Robert

Letter of the Month

Hello team Digit, I find your magazine great. I am one of your readers with a whole load of your past issues, and I'm thinking of donating them along with the DVD'S.

1. People don't like that tech savvy people like you are distributing DVDs. They think it's outdated. But I think that technology is for helping people. DVDs are helping many people, and the people who don't need DVDs can donate them to those who do. You should be encouraging people to do it, or you should be giving them option if they want DVDs with their subscription.
2. In this month's issue, I saw an email from Mr Nayan Panda who told you that he wants to be a game developer. Coincidentally, I also want to be a game developer, make it big. So it'd be awesome if he and I can have a conversation. Can I please have his email ID? I really need to talk to him. I'm tired of searching people I can work with and not finding them. If I get the email IDs of all the people you know who are/want to make games, I promise I will release some amazing games you will not love to play.

Homies 4 lyf team digit.

-Archit Misra

Now that's a suggestion and a half! We'd love to connect readers together to be able to collaborate on making games or apps. Of course we cannot do so without explicit permission, as it would be a privacy violation, so let's see if Nayan writes in and accepts your invitation to collaborate. Another way you (and others interested in this idea) could do this is to all sign up on our Digit Forum (digit.in/community), because that place was made for exactly things like this, and more. We'd love it if people got off pointless social media and got on to the forum instead, in order to actually do something constructive. As for the DVDs, that's a good idea too. :-)

-Mithun

