

Qualcomm Quick charge wireless

Qualcomm Quick Charge comes to wireless charging, powers the Xiaomi's 20W Wireless Charger. <https://digit.in/mar19-40>

Sony's tallest display smartphones

Sony has come up with new Xperia 1, 10, and Xperia 10 Plus smartphones - widest screen ever on smartphones. <https://digit.in/mar19-41>

HOW TO OPTIMISE YOUR SOCIAL MEDIA FEED

Learn how to declutter from the overwhelming number of posts flooding your social media feeds.

Abhijit Dey | abhijit@digit.in ased on a report by GlobalWebIndex from 2017, an average person has 7.6 social media accounts.

B

While users between the age of 16-34 used an average of 8.7 accounts, people aged between 55-64 had an average of 4.6 active accounts. In both cases, the numbers are high enough to reflect how addicted we are to social media. For the ones who are always checking their phones, switching from one social media app to another, it could sometimes get overwhelming. Social networks often try to dictate what you see on your timeline rather than being the other way around. This results in an inefficient feed that includes a lot of useless information, draining away a lot of your time while you're trying to hunt for your desired content. Another report by GlobalWebIndex stated that an average internet user was spending more than two hours daily on social media and messaging apps. The number of social media accounts is rising every year and naturally, the time spent on these apps are rising as well. While we've already covered on how to go on a digital detox, this time we'll be showing you how to make your time spent on these social media apps worth it. And it can only be done when you declutter all the mess.

SWITCH TO MOST RECENT POSTS

Starting off with Facebook, the social network giant moved away from a chronological timeline ages ago. Now, you'll see content that's popular among your friend's list, gaining the most interactions between each other, assuming that you might also be interested in those posts. But that's also the reason why suddenly some of your friends almost disappeared or hardly show up in your feed. If you want to go back to the way things were before and view posts appear chronologically, head over to the left sidebar on Facebook, click the three-dotted icon and select 'Most Recent'. Your timeline will be back to display posts from your friend list as they are posted. This can only be done on the website since you can't switch to a chronological timeline in the app. However, you can open up the 'Most Recent' feed from the Menu in the app. There's no way to enable this feed by default when you open the Facebook app.

CLEAN UP YOUR FRIEND LIST AND PAGES

You can further change things up in the Facebook News Feed to make it cleaner. Say you want posts from a few people to always appear in your feed on the top. Or maybe you don't want to see some people's posts on your feed without having to remove them from your friend list. You can completely control these aspects. Click on the same three-dotted icon but this time click on 'Edit Preferences'. Alternatively, you can click on the dropdown icon on the top left of the top bar and select 'News Feed Preferences'. A pop-up appears with a step by step process of filtering out your news feed. You can prioritise the people and pages you want to see first, unfollow people and groups to get rid of their posts and even follow older pages or reconnect