X-men's Guinness recognition

Hugh Jackman and Sir Patrik Stewart made it to the Guinness Book of World Records for the "longest career as a live-action Marvel superhero" recently. Both started off in their respective roles in the X-men movies back in 2000. <https://dgit.in/HJSPSGui>

WHAT'S NEW

Gotham's departure from canon

Gotham has successfully introduced numerous iconic characters and villains from the Batman comics, without having Batman in it, yet. There have been several times when Gotham didn't stick to the original source material for several of its characters.

The biggest departure would be how Bruce Wayne transitions into becoming the masked vigilante. In the show, he's seen to be investigating the death of his parents right after it happened. He also starts training and as the season ends, we are going to see him transform into the Dark Knight. In the comics, he trains to become Batman when he's an adult and everything follows after that. Another case would be the killer of his parents is Matches Malone, but it was Joe Chill in the comics. One more departure is Penguin's evil but sympathetic character. He's only cold and cruel in the comics, but in Gotham his character has been given more layers to create a love/hate relationship with the viewers. <https://dgit.in/GthmCanon>

All Netflix Marvel shows are now cancelled

Back when the MCU was already booming with multi-billion-dollar movies, Netflix set out to create a universe in TV shows. Although they weren't directly connected to the MCU, they would make call outs and acknowledge its existence. Shows such as Luke Cage, Iron Fist and Daredevil had been cancelled long back. Recently, Jessica Jones and Punisher got cancelled as well, marking the end of all the Marvel TV shows made by Netflix. As for The Defenders, it was a mini-series and there hasn't been an official cancellation but that begs the question of whether more episodes were planned at all.

It isn't clear why some of the good ones were cancelled. Disney is launching their own streaming platform called Disney+ this year. They have plans for several original contents including popular characters from the MCU. The characters from the TV show universe might find a place in the new service. Netflix also has been creating a lot of original content and moving away from Marvel properties could be a sign of them saying that they don't need licensed characters or stories. The streaming war is getting aggressive.
