T hese card games are interpretations of board games that get rid of many of the problems of the titles that they are based on. More people can participate, the round times are shorter, the rules are simplified or parts of the gameplay are abstracted, leading to everyone just enjoying the game more.

The card games can also act as introductions to the more complex titles. The best part is, the card game versions are available at a fraction of the cost of the board games. You can select each card game based on a board game that you already like playing.

IF YOU LIKE MONOPOLY, TRY MONOPOLY DEAL

Monopoly Deal is a little more complicated to understand, but once you get into it, it is really fun. At every turn, each player makes a choice of placing money cards and property cards in two piles in front of them. Cash owed is paid from the money pile, and the remainder from the property pile. All the strategy is in which cards you keep in your hand, and which cards are placed on the table. Monopoly Deal solves two big problems in the original game. The winner is not the last person remaining, but the first person to collect three complete property sets. A good house rule to extend the game is three complete sets and 10 million dollars. Also, any number of people can join in on the fun. If there are more than five people playing, just add another deck and you are good to go. There are various versions of Monopoly Deal available, just like Monopoly. This includes the India edition and the Millionaire edition. We suggest going for the India edition.

IF YOU LIKE Pictionary, TRY Pictionary CARD GAME

If you hate having to draw out clues in Pictionary, then the card game is
