just the game for you. The basic setup is the same as Pictionary, with two people using the cards to make their teams guess a particular word. Instead of drawing each clue out, you get an entire deck of cards with doodles and shapes on them. You have to assemble or act out the word using these clue cards. The fun part is, like the multi coloured tiles or specially marked out words in Pictionary, both teams have to simultaneously guess the word for every single clue. The team that is the first to guess five rounds, wins the game. The same deck of cards has a simple set of kiddie clues on one side, and a more complex set of adult clues on the other side. This is an incredibly fun title for parties, as each game and each round is short. Additionally, as there are only two teams, any number of people can play. It is also possible to leave or join the game at any time.

IF YOU LIKE BOGGLE, TRY BOGGLE SLAM

While Boggle is a classic and insanely fun tabletop game, Boggle Slam actually takes it a step further. This is because the entire game involves a frenzied scramble to get rid of all your cards as soon as possible. You start with a four letter word, then each person places a single letter card to create a new word from the pile. The letters are on both sides of the card, and the gameplay proceeds in no particular order. Each game can be incredibly short, with some games getting over in under two minutes. Any number of people can play the game, as long as the word in the middle is within arms reach. The game is flexible in the sense that an additional deck can be used if necessary. The only problem is the tendency to make up words, which nobody knows, but may well exist in the dictionary. A house rule for this problem is to define the word or use it in a sentence.

IF YOU LIKE THE SETTLERS OF CATAN, TRY CATAN CARD GAME

Settlers of Catan is a time consuming but rewarding game, and the card game version is equally so! The Catan Card Game is a duelling title, which means it is designed for two players, but if there are more people, it is just possible to split everyone up into two teams. The essential mechanics of Catan are there. Players have to construct roads, expand settlements, and build new ones, all the time gathering resources according to the roll of the die. The card game is more about strategically using the available resources, as against praying to the die roll gods to deliver the resources that you need. There are a staggering seven expansions for the card game, so this is by no means a simple title, but a fleshed out one in its own right. If you are looking for a simpler version of Catan, then there is a dice game variant, which any number of people can play, but which retains all the basic concepts and mechanics of Catan.

IF YOU LIKE TICKET TO RIDE, TRY TICKET TO RIDE: THE CARD GAME

The first thing that you notice about Ticket to Ride: The Card game is just how gorgeous the artwork is. The destination cards and the train cards just look better than the original game. You just play with a deck of cards, without the need for tiny train pieces that can get lost, or the board. Like Ticket to Ride, there are five destination cards or tickets, and five train parts that are face up. There is also the locomotive, or the wild card, with the rules of drawing being similar to the board game version. The objective of the game is to add cards to your railyard of the same colour, and obtain the colours and quantities required for each destination or ticket. Now, the wrench in the plans is that there is a memory game component, where in each turn players have to take cards from their railyard, and put it on a face down, "on the track" stack, and subsequently remember the colours and numbers of the cards in that stack till the end of the game.

IF YOU LIKE CARCASSONNE, TRY CARCASSONNE

While retaining some of the basic concepts of Carcassonne, Cardcassonne is a different game entirely. The underlying mechanic of placing tiles on the table is done away with. Instead, there are four tracks, one each for five coloured cards. Players have to add cards to a particular track, and then claim all the cards in that track at just the right time. The question in every turn is whether to improve a stack or to claim it to prevent someone else from claiming it. There is also a treasure chest that gets marked at the end of the game, and some special cards that are worth an insane number of points. While the randomness of the game can influence the total points a bit, the winning conditions depend on how much you are willing to stick your neck out to get the big pile of points. This is a quick game that takes less than an hour for each round, and a maximum of five people can play it.

IF YOU LIKE PICTUREKA!, TRY PICTUREKA! CARD GAME

Priced at just over ₹200, this is a title with incredible value for money, because there are actually four games that can be played with the same deck of cards. The first is called 8-Away. Each player is dealt eight cards, which they place in front of them in four stacks of two cards. A mission card is drawn from the pile, each with two missions. Now the players have to find something from their stack that matches the description on the mission cards. If they do, and all the other players agree, they can use up one of their cards. The card beneath the used card is then available for play. This is the best game of the four. In Alphabetti, players hunt through their stack to find an image that can be described by a word that starts with the chosen letter. Matchureka! Is a memory game, where the cards are laid out on a grid and users can claim pairs of cards if they match with the mission cards. Finally, Cow's Creative Combo involves gathering three cards where all of them match a particular mission card.
