

18 Years!

I CAN'T BELIEVE IT'S BEEN 18 YEARS since Digit was born. Feels like just a few years ago I was running out to my local newspaper guy, looking to buy the latest Digit. I used to make him promise to keep a copy for me, and he always did, but that never stopped me from asking if it had come every day of the last week of the month. And when it had just arrived, I remember the smile he'd flash at me as I was approaching his stall. Out would come the ₹100 I'd been saving for weeks, and in a flash the deal was done and I was heading home, eager to rip open the packaging and get to the innards. My friends would make fun of me, and say that "Digit is Raaabo's Debonair". (If you don't know of that other magazine, good, keep it that way.)

Sometimes I'm envious of you guys. I'm sure some of you still experience the excitement of opening the pack, first pulling off all the tapes and then sifting through the components, wondering which to attack first. Or maybe, like me, you have a favourite, and all else gets abandoned until that one component of Digit is devoured. For me it was the CDs 18 years ago, for you it might be the DVD or FT or the main mag, or something else.

Just over a year into my Digit addiction, this joy was taken away. Long story short, I joined the team, and ever since then, I've always known what was covered inside Digit that month. Now it's more pride and reminiscing of the month gone by when I rip open my copy of Digit (which I get for free), but it's not the same type of excitement, sadly.

What is exciting is sitting with a team of awesome people and planning how best to wow you, and make sure we try and make a product that, no matter what the price tag, you will still think of it as value for money. This month, with the smallest team we've ever had, we've put out the most content we've ever done in recent times. In our effort to make the ₹300 price tag look like peanuts, we pulled out all the stops, and hopefully, most of you will agree.

However, this time, we're not just going for physical products in the plastic packaging, we're adding in even more stuff.

To begin with, we will have Crack The Code VII in June, which we will announce on our social media pages (Facebook, Twitter and IG). Expect the announcement to be between the 15th and 20th of June. Get ready to put your grey matter to the test, to have a lot of fun, sleepless nights, and hopefully also win some exciting prizes along the way.

However, the bigger deal, in my opinion at least, is the launch of our first ever eDVD. Yeah I know that nomenclature kind of sucks, but I couldn't come up with anything better. Happy to hear suggestions from you, and if I like the name you provide, I'll credit you with it online.

We know that the most important bit about the DVD is the fact that Team Digit sits down and looks for the best stuff out there that would be of some use or entertainment value to you, and then collects it all into one, easy-to-access bundle. What we've been limited by is the physical media we provide, which is something that's only accessible on PCs and has a size limit. With more of us willing to download the stuff we need, and even more of us hungry for good content on our phones, I felt it was important to make sure we had something to offer you, even if it has been a long time coming.

On the 15th of every month, we will release that month's 'eDVD' which will be made available for free to all magazine readers. For example, on the 15th of June you will get access to about 40 GB worth of content (this number could go up or down every month), which will range from standard software downloads, to curation of videos we feel you must watch, entertainment, movies, documentaries, games, ebooks, and more importantly, smartphone apps and content that will make your phone more interesting and educative than it already is. All of this will be hosted on our Geek site – <https://geek.digit.in> – and will require you to sign up for an account. More plans are in the pipeline that include giving our subscribers special early access to magazine content and other exclusives online, using that same Geek account.

As always, please feel free to suggest what you'd like us to offer as exclusives to subscribers and purchasers of the magazine, and we will most certainly try to deliver that. Here's to (at least) another 18 years of you and us ruling the Indian tech scene together. d

"Sometimes I'm envious of you guys. I'm sure some of you still experience the excitement of opening the pack, first pulling off all the tapes and then sifting through the components, wondering which to attack first."

Liked or hated this column? Let me know at: editor@digit.in
| facebook.com/raaabo
| @raaabo