

09 SCP FOUNDATION

The SCP Foundation is a collaborative science fiction project, which is a catalogue of weird objects, creatures or individuals that in some way or the other do not follow the accepted laws of physics. SCP stands for “special containment procedures”, which is a description of how to contain the said artefacts or organisms, for further study. Some items in the SCP catalogue have beautifully drawn artwork.

<http://www.scp-wiki.net>

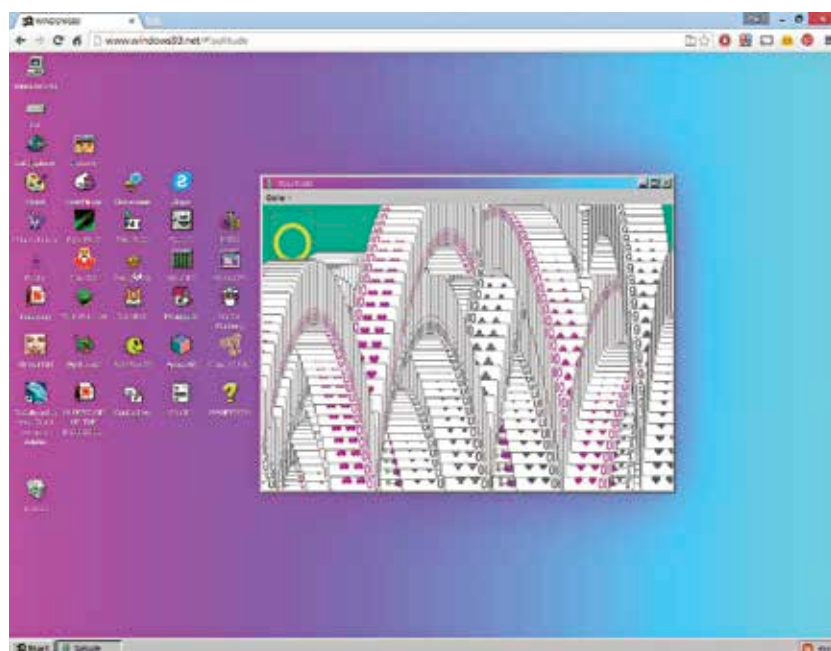

item might promise to do too much, or have absolutely no reason to exist at all.

<http://theworstthingsforsale.com>

12 TWISTEDSIFTER

This site is like a time machine of internet virality. The site is updated regularly, but the best posts are on Friday evenings, which contains something known as The Shirk Report. This is a single post that combines the most popular GIFs, the most viral videos for that week.

<https://twistedstifer.com>

Windows93.net

10 SUPERHERO DB VS

If you ever got into an argument about who would win in a fight between Iron Man and Batman, this is the website that will let you figure it out. A number of simulated fights take place, and the result is a ratio of how many engagements each superhero won. You can also pit teams of superheroes against each other. Oh, and Iron Man would win.

<https://www.superherodb.com/versus/>

11 THE WORST THINGSFORSALE

This is a daily blog that lists all the worst things that are available on the internet. The reason why each item is the worst differs. The design might be really bad, or the

13 USETHIS

The site carries interviews of people who work in various fields such as game developers, art directors, UI designers, content creators and startup founders. The questions are very specific in each interview, and is focused on the kind of hardware and software these professionals use on their jobs.

<https://usesthis.com>

14 WAITBUTWHY

A series of deep dives into various topics, with stick figure illustrations that somehow are really effective at explaining story, no matter how difficult the subject is.

<https://waitbutwhy.com>

15 WESTEROS FORUMS

There is a legendary king in English and Welsh mythology who could not use his legs, and was known as Brán the Blessed. Members on the Westeros.org forum had figured out that Bran Stark would sit on the Iron Throne based on the similarities between the two, back in 2015. The discussions on the forum dive deep into the ASOIAF books, and is pretty welcoming towards new members and ideas.

<https://westeros.org>

16 WHATIF

The WhatIf section of XKCD explores all kinds of ridiculous scenarios based on questions sent in by readers. Can whales be hunted with electric prods? What is the duration of the longest possible sunset? Is it possible to stop a train using ball bearing guns? No matter how ridiculous the question, the answers try to be as scientific as possible, accompanied by XKCD toons.

<https://what-if.xkcd.com>

17 WIKIPEDIA

We all know that this is an internet rabbit hole, and it is easy to get lost by following link after link through the pages. The lists are particularly interesting, and the lists of lists is a great way to get to them. There is a game that you can play with Wikipedia, which is to find the shortest number of clicks it gets to go from any random page, to Adolf Hitler, which is like the Kevin Bacon of Wikipedia pages.

<https://www.wikipedia.org/>

18 WINDOWS 93

At first it looks like an online simulation of Windows 93, but it goes much deeper than that. You can load up DosBox, and play a number of games, or even design your own game using a bunch of game creation tools. Alternatively, you can browse the documents and find images that are already saved. There are also art creation tools, a MIDI Jukebox, demos and a fully functional NES emulator.

<https://www.windows93.net>