

18 TECH INNOVATIONS THAT RUINED LIVES

The 20th century was home to some majorly significant technological innovations. We've been advancing pretty rapidly technologically in the past few decades. Innovations are happening aplenty, so it's not unlikely for some of them to do more harm to humanity than good. Like the innovations on this list from the 21st century.

01 DRM

DRM or Digital Rights Management has been around for years now to counter piracy in the video game industry. Additionally, it turns out, it also prevents "fair use". You know, where as the owner of said piece of content you're allowed to make copies of that content. Well, is piracy still around? Yep. Is DRM still a pain in our behinds? Yep.

02 AUTOTUNE

Many in the music industry seem to be using Autotune, which basically lets you alter the pitch of your voice and musical instruments. This means that nobody needs any musical talent to sound good. That's not to say that today's music sounds good...

Sometimes innovations do more harm than good. These are those times...

Manish Rajesh | manish@digit.in

03 INSTANT MESSAGING

Before instant messaging we had phone calls. We had boundaries back then. After an hour on a call, it was time to hang up.

Phones reduced face-to-face interactions, but nowhere as much as IM did. And if you think IM is bad, read #4!

04 SOCIAL MEDIA

Social Media is just depressing. Literally. It's causing depression in its users. The constant need for people to broadcast themselves online is leaving them dissatisfied, craving for attention, and naturally, jealous of those who are getting it. Also, we can thank SM for starting all sorts of crazy trends, some of which have even caused deaths!

05 MICROTRANSACTIONS

Microtransactions are ruining video games. It's all well and good when it's a free video game and all you can buy is cosmetics. But the moment you put microtransactions into a game you've already paid full price for, well, you know the industry is going down a dangerous path. Of course, there's the pay2win microtransactions too, which nobody is a fan of. Except the ones paying to win of course.

06 SELFIE STICKS

Ah, the selfie. There's no way this wouldn't be on the list. Especially here, in India, where we've seen the most selfie related deaths. There's even a disorder relating to selfies, called Selfitis, which is the obsessive taking of selfies. One look at the number of selfies on anyone's phone can give you a good idea of how narcissistic they might be.

