

and the Glove eventually failed because of its confusing controls, uncomfortable fit and limited hardware. A reboot of this kind of Glove could be exciting since we certainly have the technology for it now.

Nokia 7280

No, this is not an MP3 player. And yes, this is a retro phone. The Nokia 7280 was an intriguing handset which was also dubbed the “lipstick phone”. This phone drumroll did not have a keyboard, but simply relied on an iPod-esque click wheel. A modern reboot of this device could easily do away with the keyboard by heavily relying on voice controls, which is getting more intuitive every passing day, and gesture controls. In the original device, you would have to slide the camera out to access it and the screen transformed into a mirror when not in use.

RETRO PHONES

Over the past few years, users have been treated to reboots and remakes of retro phones. Here are our favourites.

Nokia 3310

The Nokia 3310, alongside the famous 1100, were termed ‘indestructible phones’ and for good reason. The 17-year old phone made a come back in 2017 and the modern-day version even has the good ol’ game that kickstarted mobile gaming – Snake. The relaunched device is produced by HMD Global which licensed the Nokia brand in 2016. It even comes with an absurdly long standby time of an entire month!

Blackberry KeyOne

As Blackberry attempts to reclaim its long-gone customer base, they have resurrected the physical QWERTY keypad that was highly-acclaimed in previous

OTHER RETRO THINGS THAT HAVE RETURNED

IKEA retro furniture

Celebrating their 75th anniversary, Ikea recently relaunched furniture collections of their most iconic pieces of furniture, named the Gratulera series, from the 1950s to the 2000s.

Retro film/TV series

A number of films and TV series from the past are returning such as Ace Ventura and Charlie's Angels, and then there's all the live-action remakes. TV series such as the Office are also returning.

Retro Fashion

Retro fashion trends are slowly creeping back into our lives, and closets. Half-length sleeves, mock-neck T-shirts, bell bottoms, and many more have been revived.

DeLorean DMC-12

The DeLorean DMC-12 which gained popularity after featuring in the film Back to the Future in 1985 is rearing for a comeback after its production stopped in 2005.

Retro bands or artists

80s and 90s music, with its grungy anger and politically-charged lyrics is making a comeback. Some notable examples include Bananarama, Boyzone, Wet Wet Wet, Take That, Jamiroquai, The Stone Roses and many more.

Blackberry devices. The Blackberry Key-One offers you the best of two worlds, in a sense, since it brings back the physical QWERTY keypad and also retains Google's Android OS.

Samsung W2019

The Samsung W series, namely the W2017, W2018 and W2019, brings back the beloved flip phone feature with all the bells and whistles of a current day, premium flagship device. The 2019 variant comes equipped with not one, but two AMOLED screens to facilitate usage when closed or open. Flipping the device open will reveal a retro-style number pad and hardware navigation keys. While the keypad definitely keeps the retro-style, the internals of the 2019 variant are pretty beefy with a Snapdragon 845 SoC, 6GB of RAM and 256GB internal storage.

Razr V4

The Moto Razr is definitely remembered as the pinnacle of cool during its time. Its striking appearance and thin profile made it a fashion statement of sorts. Motorola is reviving the Razr with a massive makeover. The phone will keep its original flip-phone feature, however, flipping the device open will reveal a gorgeous, possibly AMOLED, foldable screen instead of the original keypad.

Nokia 8110 (Banana Phone)

Nokia definitely learned with the reboot of the 3310 that people go bananas for retro tech. Naturally, Nokia decided to relaunch its 1996 ‘banana phone’ which was featured in The Matrix (which is also making a comeback). This rebooted device has the same curved body with a protective cover and the yellow version certainly justifies the name ‘banana phone’. It also features a ridiculous standby time of 25 days!
