WHAT'S NEW

Avenger no more

After failing to come to terms over the future of Spider-Man movies, Sony Pictures and Walt Disney Studios have ended shared custody of Spider-Man. Marvel Studios Head, Kevin Feige, will be stepping down from the producer-role he enjoyed on all previous Spider-Man films. This effectively leaves the future of the beloved web-slinger in question. The feud between Sony, who owns all rights to the character, and Disney, who negotiated a deal with Sony to use the character in the MCU, was apparently financial in nature.

Reportedly, Disney was vying for a 50/50 stake in profits, however, Sony was absolutely against this proposition. Until now, Sony was only giving up around 5 percent of first-dollar gross to Disney from the Marvel movies that Spidey starred in. Fans are extremely disappointed with this news since Tom Holland's version of Spider-Man had rapidly become extremely popular amongst MCU fans.

Fans have been threatening to completely boycott Sony upon hearing this saddening news. Feige-produced Spider-Man: Far From Home is still the most profitable film of all time. Perhaps, Spider-Man fans can convince Sony to cough up some more profit stake and hand it over to Disney to continue Spidey's journey in the MCU.

Matrix 4 is coming to the big screen

The cultural phenomenon, the Matrix, has spawned two sequels and this year marks its 20th anniversary. Now, a new instalment for the franchise is on the way, which will probably be called The Matrix 4. Keanu Reeves and Carrie-Anne Moss will reprise their roles as Neo and Trinity respectively, and Lana Wachowski will return to direct as well as write the fourth Matrix instalment. Let's see how the film explains Neo's return after his supposed death at the end of The Matrix Revolutions.

Aleksander Hemon and David Mitchell will join

Wachowski as writers for the film and it will go into production sometime in early 2020. The first few reports of a possible new Matrix movie began way back in 2017. However, in May 2019, reports surfaced that the relaunch had been cancelled, so it has been a bit of back and forth. We hope this instalment holds up to the first movie and doesn't have the issues Revolutions had.
