using all kinds of impossible manoeuvres, such as taking down enemies to a blaster that has gotten stuck to his legs. According to the theory, this is just another form of fighting that is deliberately designed to look clumsy, like the drunken kung fu master.

SNOKE IS DARTH PLAGUEIS

Following the release of The Force Awakens, there was a theory circulating around that Snoke is actually Darth Plagueis the wise, who found a way to defeat death, so to speak. However, the character died without any explanation in The Last Jedi, with the directors noting that there was not enough time to explore his background. However, there are ways the theory can still hold true going forward, to the final instalment in the Skywalker saga.

THE PIXAR THEORY

Viewers began noticing similar brands and objects across many Pixar films, leading fans to believe that all the films take place in the same shared universe. Jon Negroni dived deep into this theory and really fleshed it out. In the continuity, the magic from Brave causes animals to develop speech, which then evolve over time, resulting in Ratatouille and Finding Nemo. The villain in The Incredibles, meanwhile, develops AI that explains why the cars in Cars and the toys in Toy Story can talk. All of this leads to an apocalypse where humans are reduced or sent away, and the animals take over the planet. Then Wall E takes place, restoring humans on Earth. Humans, sentients and animals all evolve together into the Monsters of Monsters University. The doors actually travel back in time. Also the kid, Boo is the witch from Brave. Yes, there is a lot to unravel here, but fortunately there's a website dedicated to the theory.

PULP FICTION

While there are many theories as to what was inside the suitcase in Pulp Fiction, there are a few correct answers. According to the director, it is whatever the audience imagines it to be. On set, there was a light bulb inside to give the glowing effect. The most interesting theory is that the suitcase had Marsellus Wallace's soul, which had been sold to the devil. It explains the extreme wealth that Wallace has acquired, as well as the bandage at the back of his forehead, from where the devil apparently removed the soul.

THE SIMPSONS ARE GENIUSES

It started with the simple hunch that Bart is a supergenius, and is just hiding it. The idea blew up on Reddit with a user coming up with another explanation – everyone in the Simpsons family are geniuses, but Lisa is the only person who embraces it. Homer has a crayon lodged in his brain that keeps his genius tendencies in check. Marge chose a domestic life to be happy. Grampa is senile but the flashbacks show that he was pretty smart in his prime.

ELSA AND ANNA ARE SISTERS OF TARZAN

This one is a little strange, as it hovers in a space of its own between canon and fan theory. It is the backstory of what happens to the parents of Elsa and Anna from Frozen. In a Reddit AMA, when asked if the King and Queen are really dead, one of the directors, Chris Buck revealed that the King and Queen did not really die in a shipwreck. They washed up on shore, built a treehouse, had a baby boy, and were ultimately eaten by a leopard. That is actually the opening to Tarzan, which goes to show that Elsa and Anna are the elder sisters of Tarzan.

STAN LEE IS A WATCHER

A bus driver, a frustrated citizen, a beauty pageant judge, a security guard, a delivery man and a bartender, Stan Lee has played them all in MCU cameos, but what if they are all the same person, and just one character? According to the fan theory, Lee is an agent of The Watchers, a race of extra-terrestrials who observe the goings on across the multiverse. James Gunn
