

Shroud is now Mixer-exclusive

Popular streamer, Shroud, has officially made the move to Microsoft's Mixer streaming platform. <https://digit.in/nov19-55>

Pikachu-themed gaming accessories

Razer has teamed up with the Pokemon Company to launch Pikachu-themed gaming peripherals. <https://digit.in/nov19-56> finally, the future, in order to show him how terrible his life really is because of his miserly ways.

[SHORT STORY] ALL YOU ZOMBIES

Written in 1959, by the brilliant Robert A Heinlein (one of the “big three” of sci-fi authors), this is a story of a circular paradox that will blow your mind when you read it. We won't spoil it for you. Just make sure you experience this classic. The movie Predestination was based on this story by Heinlein.

[BOOK / TV SERIES] DOCTOR WHO

This is a massive saga about “The Doctor” who is an alien Time Lord from the planet Gallifrey (located 250 million light years from Earth), and his adventures across time in a time machine that's called the TARDIS and is shaped like an old style, blue,

Doctor Who: Season 1 [2005]

London police box from the 1900s. He tries to save innocents from harm using his time machine, and also ends up fighting some bad alien species, such as the Daleks and the Cybermen. Doctor Who has a cult following of fans from across the world, and can be compared in numbers to fans of Star Trek and Star Wars!

[BOOK] THE MAN WHO AWOKE

Although written in 1933 by Laurence Manning, it was only published in novel form in 1975, and boy, did it turn out to be significant. Like Rip Van Winkle and many others, the story is about a man who time travels by sleeping for 5000 years at a time. We won't spoil the book for you, but once you read it, you will realise that quite a lot of popular science fiction that has followed, especially as movies, might have been inspired by this rather impressive book that was considered nothing more than cheap fiction at the time it was published!

[MOVIE] TERMINATOR SERIES

As a testament to the popularity of this series, we will write nothing more than this sentence about it.

[SHORT STORY / MOVIE] A SOUND OF THUNDER

This gem from Ray Bradbury is a must-read story that was first published in 1952. Although it was made into a movie in 2005 starring Ben Kingsley, the movie doesn't do justice to the story. In 2055 a company called

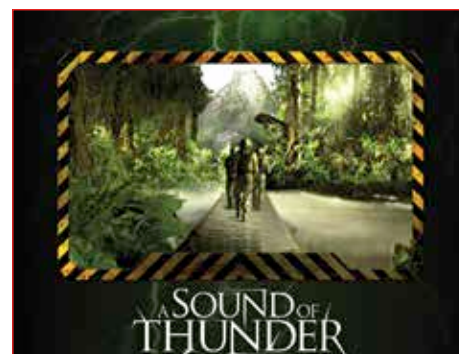

Time Safari has captured the market on Time Travel and offers the rich and famous a chance to go hunting. Of course, since changing the past affects the future, the company only chooses animals that are about to die naturally anyway, and allow their clients to hunt the animals just before the time they would have died naturally anyway. In order to keep the future safe, levitating pathways are set up that prevent any interaction between the clients and the past. While on a hunt, a client is startled by a T-Rex he's supposed to kill, and steps off the path. When they return to the future, things have all changed...

This story was walking about the butterfly effect before the term “butterfly effect” was even coined, and you can't have time travel fiction without knowing about this effect – changing a tiny thing in the past can set about a chain of reactions that changes the futures of time travellers drastically.

[MOVIES] VARIOUS

Apart from what we've mentioned already, there are many more that won't even make this list, but are worthy, and there are some we will just mention in passing now, that were supremely important in the long journey across time that the genre has experienced.

A Sound of Thunder: Movie

For example, Interstellar is one that deals with the time dilation caused by gravity, and does a very good job of it. Looper is an example of time travel bringing in a whole new kind of criminal and law enforcement. Time Cop did the exact same thing, as did Minority Report – which was based on a 1956 Philip K Dick short story called The Minority Report.

Frequency, the movie and the subsequent TV series, looked at a very different type of time travel... the ability to communicate with the past or future. 12 Monkeys (spoiler alert) ended up being about time travel. Contact, Arrival, etc, all involved some sort of time loss and experiencing very long time passage in a very short time. Movies like The Matrix or The Truman Show, series such as Westworld, or novels like Time Out of Joint by Philip K Dick are sometimes described as time mirages, or time hoaxes, where technology is used to make you believe that you are living a life that is based on a lie, and the time travel aspect is actually an illusion of making someone believe they live in a different time than they actually do.

There are a million more examples that one can give, but most follow very similar patterns to the ones we've already mentioned. Do you think we are missing any from this list? Write in and let us know.