

Disney+ skimping out on quality

Some experts believe that Disney+ streaming service may be delivering HDR video content that lacks quality. <https://digit.in/dec19-13>

Vinted raises $141 million

Vinted, an online second-hand clothes marketplace, raised $141 million at a $1 billion+ valuation. <https://digit.in/dec19-14>

Google Earth is home to countless spectacles and images, some of which are extremely peculiar. The images are obtained from a plethora of satellites in the geosynchronous orbit or closer, airplanes, drones and even balloons. Let's have a look at some of these mystical wonders.

Dhriti Datta |
dhriti@digit.in

An array of circular gardens, located in a suburb of Brøndby, Denmark, were created to grant city dwellers an area to grow vegetables, plants and flowers. Owners are also permitted to live in this haven between April and October.

Meticulously constructed in 1593, Palmanova in northern Italy has the shape of a star. It is said to represent the Renaissance vision of an ideal city.

Dubbed the 'boneyard', the Davis Monthan Air Force Base in Tucson, Arizona is where obsolete or 'dead' military planes are sent. It contains military planes all the way from WW II in different stages of decay.

The largest recorded hot spring in the world is situated in the Yellowstone National Park in the US. It has been noted by geologists for its striking colouration with hues of red, orange, yellow, green and blue.

Behold the world's largest swimming pool spanning across 20 acres (8 hectares), located at the Chilean resort of San Alfonso del Mar. The deep end descends a shocking 115 feet!

Situated at the Egyptian Red Sea resort of Hurghada, the Desert Breath is a gorgeous art installation that was constructed in the year 1997. It is made up of 178 cones that create a series of spirals.

These bizarre lines that are reminiscent of the lines connecting constellations are actually intricate patterns created by an oil field in Rio Negro Province, Argentina.