Baby Yoda has taken over the internet, and of course this masterpiece by Twitter user @Litt1eR3d will be more memorable than The Creation of Adam.

The New American Gothic by Criselda Vasquez is a reinterpretation of the iconic painting known as American Gothic by Grant Wood. This painting works not just a remix, but has a story to tell on its own right, poignantly showing the situation of immigrants.

Hirotaka Hamasaki is probably one of the most loved school teachers in Japan for recreating famous paintings using the humble medium of chalk.

This digital painting by Alex Ruiz imagines what Vincent Van Gogh could have seen in the skies on that fateful Starry Night.

Quatre Caps reimagines classic still life paintings, only with modern day packaging. If you look closely, even the backgrounds are plastic sheets.

Rodrigo Pinheiro uses photos from old magazines combined with clips of paper to bring classic pieces of artwork into a contemporary setting.

Adeptitude, a graphic design and marketing agency in the UK has imagined a series of album covers as if they only told a part of the story.
