It is said that desperation can make a person commit grave atrocities... exactly like what Raaabo did to his bank account by getting himself an RTX 2080 Ti... in Australian Dollars no less which is insanely priced from the perspective of us plebs.

And what for, you may ask, did the great bald eagle suddenly feel the urge to buy himself the most ridiculously priced graphics card on the planet? News of Half-Life: Alyx, of course. Yes, he's a fan and he's going to spare no expenses to be one of the first to play the game. It is said that the very first pre-order registered in Valve's servers originated from a lowly town on the East coast of Australia.

But wait! Half-Life: Alyx is a VR video game which means he has yet another nasty purchase lined up. His wallet might not be able to survive the horrors of another big purchase, thankfully the Valve Index VR kit is out of stock in all places. Otherwise that's an additional $1,600 dollars out of his account and into Gabe's pockets.

Back in India, the team's been busy making videos and gaming. You can watch the cack-handed Manish try his luck at killing equally maladroit creations in Monster Hunter: Iceborne on our YouTube channel. He's gotten very conscious about being in front of the camera and can be seen studying up on weapons, skills and tactics for hours before going live so that he doesn't embarrass himself.

Dhriti, on the other hand, has been sneaking away Mithun's Nintendo Switch to play Pokémon Sword ever since Mithun started locking up his valuables in the cupboard after Manish dropped his controller... again.

She feels very strongly for the game and was at the receiving end of everyone's jibes for defending Pokémon Sword so vehemently despite the fact that Temtem is clearly the better game. The others have challenged her to play Temtem and be the judge herself but she's been furiously adamant of not playing it because deep down even she knows that the grass is greener on the other side.

Aditya and Mithun have gone back to their usual titles, so there isn't really much to report from World of Tanks or Warframe. Also, the team recently started playing Monopoly Speed during writing breaks but it doesn't quite have the allure of Monopoly Classic. It feels a little too quick and sudden. There's hardly any time for people to plan a hostile takeover or simply stab someone else right in the back.
