YOU ARE FAIRLY NEW TO TWITCH AND ARE WATCHING YOUR CHOICE OF STREAMER.

While playing a game, their character fell off a cliff or something. Immediately you see the entire chat spam OMEGALUL or LULW. If the streamer is clueless, you see the entire chat littered with "He doesn't know PepeLaugh". If they're playing really well, you see a chain of PogU. Makes you wonder what these words mean, right? These words translate to emotes. Yes, there are way more emotes than what you see on Twitch by default. And not just normal emotes, but animated ones too. You require some tools-of-the-trade to see those emotes.

BETTERTV
Better Twitch TV or BTTV is one of the most popular extensions for Twitch. It has got tons of features that not just enhances your Twitch chat experience but also customises the entire website based on your preference. After adding it to your browser, it is accessible via the Twitch chat settings.

The most popular one is the inclusion of extra cool emotes including animated emotes (GIFs). These emotes are not part of Twitch's Global Emotes by default. So, if you do not have this extension added, you will see the name of the emotes instead of the emotes themselves.

The Completion Tooltip shows you a list of other suggested users in the chat when using @ completion. You can tag them and talk to them in chat. Upon getting tagged, the message is highlighted in red making it easy for the recipient to spot.

Other features include the ability to disable the home page stream autoplay function, automatically switching any stream to theatre mode and the ability to see messages in chat that were deleted by the moderators to name a few.

As a partnered streamer, it allows you to add desired emotes to your channel from their official website for the chat to use.

FRANKERFACEZ
FrankerFaceZ or FFZ is another popular chrome extension for Twitch parallel to BTTV. It is similar to BTTV in most aspects, but better. Using FFZ as a streamer allows you to add custom, channel-specific emotes that are usually created by viewers, for everyone to use. Being partnered with Twitch is not a requisite for you to add emotes.

One great feature about this extension is that hovering over emotes magnifies them giving a clearer picture of the emotion the chatter is trying to convey.

Using FFZ you have access to a bunch of customisable settings including the ability to change the font size of the chat. You can also customise the width
