

Black Widow delay won't affect MCU

A Marvel insider reports that Black Widow's delay will not affect the MCU timeline in any way. <https://digit.in/apr20-67>

D&D to cameo in Westworld

GoT creators David Benioff and D.B. Weiss will make cameo appearance in S3 of Westworld. <https://digit.in/apr20-68>

The MCU Fan Base

Rahul Chettiyar | feedback@digit.in

Y ou are leaving the theatre after watching an MCU movie with your friends. You are about to bid them goodbye and then the spectacled melvin with the I LOVE YOU 3000 t-shirt opens his mouth, "Umm... Yeah! So I think this is what the post-credits scene means. If you were paying close attention to the... BLAH BLAH BLAH".

Where do I begin? By mentioning their overuse of "I Love You 3000" or do I talk about their delusion that the MCU movies are worthy of even being mentioned in the same sentence as the Oscars? This fanbase is probably the most toxic and delusional fan base I have ever come across. They do not take any form of criticism and will blindly support anything that Disney serves to them on a platter that says, MARVEL on it.

This rant is not about Marvel. I like Marvel. This is about the MCU fans who parade about claiming to be Marvel fans while having limited knowledge about the franchise and blindly supporting them despite their shortcomings, while trash-talking DC along the way.

LIMITED KNOWLEDGE

These fans get into comic book debates despite their knowledge being limited to the MCU movies. They then go on to make bold statements supporting Marvel, even claiming that Iron-Man (Tin-Man) is better than Batman. When asked to support their claim, they go on to recite the same dialogue from the Avengers movie – "Take the suit off what are you?" "Genius, billionaire, playboy, philanthropist." Well, if we are taking clothes off, Batman is all of that, plus detective, martial artist, criminologist... Oh! They called you a hater and left. They would not care for anything that Marvel puts out that is not part of the MCU. They stray away from watching the animated series and the Netflix shows. Some are even clueless about the existence of these projects. Introduction of new characters is basically NASA to them, so they resort to watching WatchMojo videos to learn about those characters.

These fans reject the fact that a majority of their characters are copied from DC Comics. The ones who do accept go on to state that Marvel made them better. Their support to the claim is based solely on the success the MCU movies garnered over the years.

ENTITLEMENT

They act like crybabies and throw a hissy fit when a billion-dollar company does not give them what they demand. Thousands of people on Twitter threatened Disney and Marvel saying that they would dislike their videos and stop supporting them if the new movie trailer was not released.

These entitled fans even created a Change.org petition to include Robert Downey Jr. in the Academy Award nominations for Best Actor, mainly for the final scene in Avengers: Endgame where he says "I am Iron-Man" and snaps his fingers, because they hold sentimental value to it. Yeah right! Just ignore his average performance throughout the movie.

SJW FACADE

Some MCU fans claimed that Black Panther was arguably the best movie of the year, even getting nominated for Best Picture in 2019. Black Panther was an average movie. The only reason MCU kept shoving it down our throats was because they were pandering to the liberal media. Anyone who called out Black Panther for being an average movie was presumed racist, and their argument was disregarded. Some parents even had the audacity to say that "white kids" should not be allowed to dress up as Black Panther for Halloween. Okay! Simmer down Karen!

Captain Marvel was only included into the franchise to compete with DC Comics' Wonder Woman, under the guise of some feminist movement. During the release of the movie, Marvel Entertainment had the audacity to put out an Instagram story with a Captain Marvel poster calling it "The Best Superhero Movie of the Year". Yeah. No sh*t! It was the first and only superhero movie released at the time! A month later the made-up title was snagged by the "Real" Captain Marvel, property of DC Comics – Shazam! The only reason the MCU chose to do that was because of the lack of traffic and the political hatred towards the movie caused by the star Brie Larson who made some questionable remarks regarding the ethnicity and gender of film critics, pushing for more diversity. This led to half-empty theatres. Since the trailer was bland and had nothing to be excited about to begin with, people were not invested anyway. What made this worse was that there were fans who supported Larson even saying that Captain Marvel was the best female superhero movie out there and that anyone who disagreed was sexist.

HYPOCRISY

These fanboys find the "Save Martha!" scene from Zack Snyder's Batman V Superman: Dawn of Justice funny and dumb. However, it is completely okay to hold sentimental value to their version of a similar dialogue – "bUcKy iS @LiVe". Say one bad thing about that phrase and they will come headfirst at you. Their key presses get heavy and loud. The words spell out, "You wouldn't get it bro. It was too emotional". 📺