

Bauhutte gaming bed

With everyone stuck at home right now, forget a gaming chair, what we all need is a gaming bed. Forget the Acer Predator Thronos gaming chair, what you want is Japanese company Bauhutte's gaming beds. When it comes to the best of the best gaming chairs, the only time you really need to get off is to get some zzz's. Now, with gaming beds, well, that's two birds, one stone. The company has an entire range of gaming furniture to go with the bed too, for the ultimate gamer household.

The gaming bed setup can, of course, be customised to your preferences. The options you have include a customisable gaming desk, headboard, bed frame, rolling shelving, an adjustable keyboard tray, heck they'll even throw in a gaming blanket and beanbag pillow. If you're not too keen on the whole setup – which is pretty pricey at roughly $1000 (and that's NOT including your gaming system itself) – you can get your hands on just the Bauhutte game desk, which costs roughly $300. Well, if you think about it, most of us already have a bed, so just getting this desk might actually be cheaper than buying an entire gaming furniture setup.

Hot Wheels RC Tesla Cybertruck

You guys remember the Tesla Cybertruck? You know, the one where Elon Musk threw a rock at the window and cracked it. Yeah, that one. Well, if it was out of your budget, you can get your hands on a Hot Wheels version of the same Cybertruck. There's actually two versions that Mattel have introduced. The first is a 1:64 scale RC Cybertruck, which costs just $20. The second, is a 1:10 scale version of Cybertruck, much much larger than the previous option. And also much more expensive, at $400. Both models are available for pre-order on the company website, and are expected to ship in December. Both models are also limited edition, and Mattel has said that the larger of the two is already sold-out. You might still be able to get your hands on the $20 version. Although, there could be delays considering the state of things right now.

The larger of the two Cybertrucks is pretty high-end, comes with all-wheel drive just like its inspiration and can go off-road and on rugged terrain no problems. It even comes with two modes, Chill and Sports mode. The larger model also comes with working headlights and taillights. As a joke, you'll also get a cracked window vinyl sticker for your choice of Cybertruck, to make it look just like the one unveiled at the event.

