

webgames is another great site for playing together, with a bunch of popular titles simply having different names for trademark reasons. If you liked Code Names, then Codenamesgreen is a great site for playing with friends, and can be used from both a computer and a phone. The site also allows you to jump and play with public unknown groups.

STAYING FIT

It is easy for isolation to lead to a sedentary and unhealthy lifestyle. Just because you cannot go out for your daily run or visit the gym anymore, does not mean that you need to stop working out. In fact, right now you can get training from the very best in the business. Fitness coach Puneet Rao (@puneetrao_) as well as VJ and actress Rhea Chakraborty (@rhea_chakraborty) have been sharing routines on their feeds regularly since the outbreak. Jacqueline Fernandez (@jacquelinef143), Katrina Kaif (@katrinakaif), and Shilpa Shetty (@theshilpashetty) are motivating their followers by posting tips and routines. Yasmin Karachiwala (@yasminkarachiwala), the fitness trainer behind a lot of Bollywood stars also shares workouts while Namrata Purohit (@namratapurohit), a pilates expert is actually using the free time by offering customised routines suitable for individual followers.

Apart from these, there are of course a bunch of apps that help you stay fit at home. One of the ones that we like the most is called Superheroworkout. It actually gamifies the entire workout, and makes you take on imaginary combatants during the course of the routine. Camera tracking is used to achieve this, and over time you level up and gain a number of superpowers. Aaptiv has thousands of workouts organised according to individual needs, which are basically audio coaches. It is also a social network of a sort for fitness enthusiasts. Then there is InstaFitness that actually sets you up with a personal fitness coach, who can then provide you a suitable workout depending on your needs and requirements. For those who have very little time despite staying at home, Seven is an app that provides short routines that only require you to invest seven minutes every day towards the fitness regime. 4

SCHOOL'S OUT! NOW WHAT?

Keeping excitable kids occupied during a lockdown

Manish Rajesh | manish@digit.in Schools around the world are closed thanks to the COVID-19 situation, which means millions of kids, in just our country alone for that matter, are now sitting at home. Depending on the way you look at it, this could be a stressful time for them, or this could also be a mini-vacation. Either way, this puts parents or guardians in a bit of a situation, especially if they're now also working from home. Nobody wants their kid falling behind on studies or spending the entire quarantine as a lump in front of a screen. We've got some suggestions for you to keep your kids occupied, entertained, and even help them learn something new.

FIRST THINGS FIRST – CREATE A SCHEDULE

Children are accustomed to following a timetable in school, it's not a bad idea to simulate a similar system at home. You have plenty of tech around the house, we're sure many kids even have smartphones of their own. Sit with them and create a timetable, use organiser apps on their phone, and alarms if need be. It'll even be fun for them to tick things off as they're done. Also, it's not a bad idea to add some household chores to their schedules to help out around the house.

EDU-TAINMENT – LEARNING WHILE HAVING FUN

There are a number of free resources online, even more now that some premium resources are dropping their paywalls temporarily. A lot of these are fantastic learning tools for your kids to pick up and learn new things. These websites, and apps, and even YouTube for that matter, can keep kids occupied for hours on end, all while they actually learn something new.

A few good resources you can check out include websites like BrainPOP, which brings the classroom to your home. Tynker is a website that teaches
