

since they could easily come in contact with the highly infectious virus. Therefore, it is better to seek solace in the plethora of websites and apps that provide you with food, groceries and other supplies delivered right to your doorstep. Also, a lot of these apps have the option of 'contactless delivery', where the delivery executive will leave the parcel outside your door and simply ring the doorbell and leave, minimising the chance of infection even further.

In India, apps such as Big Basket, Grofers, Amazon (Fresh), and a few others are all good ways of ordering supplies with minimal exposure. Additionally, these set of apps have really streamlined their UX over the years, making them easy to grasp and use, even for elders. A simple phone call or video call with your older relative is options available. Some kind citizens across the country are even volunteering to buy groceries for senior citizens. Karuna John from Delhi tweeted, "For any senior citizen here who needs eggs, fruits, veg, milk or bread from local mother dairy I'm happy to get it for you. Please stay indoors and don't worry about these small daily jobs. Hope they listen #lockdown #delhi". Non-profit organisations such as Youngistaan Foundation (Hyderabad) also tweeted along similar lines.

STAYING FIT AND HEALTHY

Being cooped up inside the house can severely affect your fitness regime, which is especially important for seniors. Elderly people who stay more active go through fewer health issues and during viral outbreaks, it is wise to ensure that your immunity is the best it ensure that their health doesn't suffer. Those with severe underlying issues such as diabetes, heart conditions, BP and more, need to ensure to take their pills at the right time without fail. So, smart pill organisers and dispensers are a great gadget to have at this time. Some simply organise and dispense pills in a timely fashion, while others have remote monitoring capabilities (through an app) as well. This way your family can ensure you have taken your pills on time. Some good examples include Sagely Smart Weekly Pill Organiser, MedCenter System Monthly Pill Organiser, MedMinder Maya, Livi Smart Pill Dispenser and MedaCube. You can easily find these on Amazon India or other online websites. Also, there are several wearables and devices which are able to detect falls and can alert your close ones at such times. Examples include the Apple Watch, GoLiveClip, Ballie and more.

PASSING TIME

In social isolation, having nothing to do can quickly become tedious and depressing. Especially for seniors who thrive on conversation with the neighbours, household help, and people in the vicinity. Therefore, there's a need to find hobbies that can pass your time. Possibly, the easiest way to pass time today is to delve into the world of streaming services. You can set up these services on your elderly relative's phone, tablet, PC, laptop or even smart TV (even a regular TV with Chromecast or Fire Stick). Services such as Netflix, Hotstar, Amazon Prime, Voot and more have a plethora of content across various genres and languages. Hotstar has an array of regional content which can be useful for seniors who only understand their regional dialect. In addition to streaming services, e-books are also a great way to pass time. The Kindle has multiple variants from the basic one to advanced ones, with internet access. There's also enough material on board to keep seniors engaged for a long time. If they do deplete the supply, they can simply download free ones, or get the paid ones as well. Alternatively, you can also download an e-book reading app and free e-books alongside.

often enough to teach them the ropes when it comes to ordering supplies online. If the author's 78-year grandfather can do it, then so can anybody! Also, payment in the form of UPI transactions, which simply requires you to input your phone number and PIN, and no additional (maybe worrisome) details such as card number, CVV and expiry date, has made it easier for even seniors to shift to digital transactions.

If the older adults are unable to cook for themselves, food delivery apps such as Swiggy and Zomato are functional on most days (as of writing). These delivery partners bring food from restaurants that have shut down their dining rooms, but still have takeout and delivery can be. However, parks, gyms and other fitness facilities are all shut down due to them being high-risk zones. Nevertheless, seniors can turn to technology to stay active. There are a plethora of senior-focused exercise videos on YouTube which can be easily done at home with no equipment. Additionally, the National Institute of Aging has a series called 'Go4Life' which specifically focuses on workouts for older adults. If you want to add a bit of fun into your workout sessions, the Ring Fit Adventure for Nintendo Switch is a good option. Even Nintendo's older Wii will get your body moving adequately.

In addition to remaining fit during the lockdown, seniors must also
