Wassup Digit team? I wanted to praise and criticise this month's articles, but guess what? ~I couldn't get the digit mag~ I learned from my friends about the E-copies of the same, but I'm not a big fan of not having the hard copy in hand. Is there any way I can get the previous month's edition?

P. S- Should I take a dive into the programming world finally?

Hey DB,
It's sad that you didn't try the digital version. We put a lot of hard work into making it. And the April issue might not be available in print, since the lockdown ends in May. I'd recommend trying it out. It's also got tips for new skills you can learn during lockdown :-)

A hearty congratulations for the digital version of my favourite magazine. I have two challenges with the digital version though.

1. Why no mobile app or kindle subscription so that the reader can read clearly?
2. The default settings in Chrome

80.0.4044.92 (64-bit) has broken reading experience. Unless I increase the zoom 2x times I'm unable to read the mag.

Thank you for taking the time to read this mail.

Hi Prasath,
We tried the Kindle version but it just didn't work out well. The reading experience just wasn't the same. We feel the Kindle is ideal for books.

Have you tried switching to full screen mode? You can use the control below to do that.

The magazine loads progressively, and clarity depends on multiple factors. Internet speed, resolution of the screen and also the brightness.

We will try and improve the experience as we go along, so that it looks better on every screen.

For mobiles, this should default to a single page view so as to maximise on the screen. However, zooming is something we cannot do away with on mobiles just yet.

We will work on a mobile app depending on popularity of the digital version, and hopefully we will have something much more reader-friendly in the coming months.

Thank you for your valuable feedback.

The Lockdown hasn't had any particular effect on our moods. Most of the editorial staff happen to be introverts and being confined to one's own home is the ideal situation. If all services work properly, one doesn't even have to step out of the house. All we'd want is for the status quo to be maintained so that our extended siesta can be sustained. It's not much to ask for but it did turn out to be a tall order. Manish's internet connection conked off several times. The ISP's flaky connection often meant that he had to switch to using his phone's hotspot. Even that, as he figured out painfully, didn't last long. Mithun was somewhat in the same boat. He'd paid for a much fatter pipe but he barely got to experience the glory of a 1 Gbps connection but he'll make it a point to slip in a humble-brag at every opportunity he can get. Since everyone is in their comfort zone, we've seen the real parts of each other. All the extra effort that goes into grooming has practically vanished. We've seen Dhriti with her spectacles, Manish with a pencil 'stache and Robert with no hair on his face. Some of us did vow to keep fit during the lockdown so they downloaded fitness apps, started tracking calories and even set up the occasional cheat day to treat themselves. The regimen might have lasted a week at max (honestly) after which we've started treating every day as cheat day. Pretty certain a few of us are gonna end up with diabetes before the lockdown ends.
