

Replacing the flashlight

In an Android Authority survey, over 60 per cent responded they only use their phone's flash as a flashlight. <https://digit.in/jun20-54>

New battery tech

Form Energy claims that their aqueous air battery provides 150 hours of power storage. <https://digit.in/jun20-55>

The other colour that the film uses is blue. This is again done through halogen lighting. The directors incorporated this colour to create a sense of calm and peacefulness in moments of resting phase in the film, which gives the audience time to take a breath. Or in this case, the calm before the storm. The colour blue is also used in this film to create a sense of deeper anger or rather an irritation. This irritation later turns into rage and the colour scheme switches back to red again. This constant back-and-forth switch between emotions forces the audience to change their perspective on the characters, if not relate to it.

A still from Good Time highlighting the calm before the storm through the colour blue

GLASS (2019)

Directed by M Night Shyamalan, Glass is the third film in the Unbreakable trilogy, which is sort of a character study on real-life superhumans in today's day and age. Throughout the trilogy, the director has introduced three main characters in the film. A hero, a villain and a beast who acts as a minion or scapegoat that the villain uses to accomplish his goals. In this film, there is an additional character in the film whose aim is to contain the main characters. The three main characters are differentiated by their respective colour schemes. The hero in the film wears and is associated with the colour green. This is because psychologically green is associated with life-giving properties. Trees and other plant bodies for example. The job of a hero is to save and protect life. The villain in the story wears and follows a purple colour scheme. He sees himself as an important entity with majestic qualities. The colour purple, therefore, signifies royalty. His ego because he believes he is an important comic book character is better represented this way. The beast in this film follows an ochre yellow or mustard colour scheme. This is because he acts as a preacher who wants to help the mentally broken. He has deeper ideals that he wants to focus on. The mustard colour is supposed to represent the robes Hindu and Buddhist monks wear during religious ceremonies. Finally, there is the newly-introduced character whose aim is to trap the minds of the main personalities in the film. Due to her actions, the main characters gradually stop believing in the existence of their superpowers. Hence, bright primary colours such as red, which represents belief starts fading out in the film. There is a therapy scene in the film where the entrapment and lack of belief are represented artistically with the leads in the centre of a room surrounded by the pink walls (red faded out), which was the colour scheme assigned to the newly introduced external entity. Through these varied colour tricks, the director attempts to highlight the human psychology and philosophy in a subtle fashion while also leaving an impression on the audience.

A still from Glass highlighting the different colour schemes and entrapment

BREAKING BAD (2008 - 2013)

Created by Vince Gilligan, Breaking Bad follows the story of Walter White, a depressed high school science teacher turned meth lord after being diagnosed with terminal lung cancer. The series has a lot of spontaneous changes in themes and emotions throughout. In the Breaking Bad series, these elements are represented primarily through the wardrobe. The clothes the characters wear during scenes are a direct representation of the emotions, themes and elements in the show. In the series, the colour red represents aggression and violence. In the first season of the show, one of the main characters, Jesse Pinkman is seen predominantly wearing red. This is to represent his aggressive nature when it came to selling meth. Similarly, the colour yellow is associated directly with meth-cooking with selling and money laundering piling onto the fact that most hazmat suits are yellow in colour. It also signifies the universal sign for caution which is taken more into consideration as the series progresses. The colour blue serves as purity. This is seen with the high-quality meth that Walter starts cooking which becomes his signature selling point. The colour black represents a variety of things within the series such as death, deception, evil, illegal and power. One of the ways black is used to represent power is via Walter White's signature hat. Every time he puts on the hat, he is asserting a dominant and powerful personality in order to accomplish a far darker purpose. These examples are just some of the ways the creator uses colours to add character to Breaking Bad in an artistic manner.

A still from Breaking Bad highlighting the use of the colour black to signify power

Colour plays a crucial role in visual storytelling. It conveys emotions and hidden meanings in a much more subtle way than having to listen to some director's commentary track later on. To top that off, when implemented perfectly, it also adds to the appeal and character of the film, thereby differentiating a certain director's work from others in terms of class filmmaking. 