

Web design with Jamstack

The old school idea of static web pages is making a comeback to make sites load faster. <https://dgit.in/jul20-113>

One linter to rule them all

Github has open sourced its in house linter to make it easier for devs to identify errors in their code. <https://dgit.in/jul20-114>

FEEDBACK FOR THE JUNE 2020 ISSUE

Send feedback to editor@digit.in | join us on telegram - t.me/digitgeek | or on discord - discord.gg/myD8Xvt

I wrote this before the disheartening incident of 17th of June when many of our soldiers were martyred in galwan valley, which makes my question even more important...

Hey there folks, Hope you're all safe and doing well and so is digit. Lately there has been a lot of talk about boycotting of Chinese companies. Many argue that companies are manufacturing in India, but we all know the correct term would be assembled in India. But if that's the case then what should we call Apple, which manufactures maximum of its phones in China? We simply can't run from the fact that a lot of components that makeup a smartphone are manufactured in China.

To some extent, boycotting might seem plausible (I am not using 'possible', because I feel it's not), but for the common man majority of whom have to spend money very carefully, and buying a phone of rupees 12k is also a luxury, finding a a good phone that is not Chinese is impossible. Earlier we used to get such horrible smartphones at this price point (I am looking at you Samsung J Series) that even vibration motors used to be a advertised feature! Samsung is no match for its Chinese competitors in this segment.

And for mid-range or under 50k phones, nothing beats OnePlus. Indian brands like Lava, etc hardly have any presence in this segment. So I want to know, Robert, Mithun, Dhriti, Manish, Aditya, Booman, Agent 001 and the complete Digit editorial team, what are your thoughts on this issue? Is it really possible to "Boycott China"? If so, how?

—Prajwal Bang

We think the cover story is the perfect reply to this letter.

—Team Digit

digit diary

Robert is going on a 1500 km road trip for camping to some isolated spot crawling with velocirabbits, murder logs, fart squirrels, danger noodles and other kinds of nopes. But then, the whole country of Australia is somewhere in the middle of nowhere. Robert also spent a fair amount of time playing Black Mesa again, which is really poor compensation for not having a VR headset to play Alyx. This playthrough may be the reason you will see so many Half Life easter eggs in the cover story. Since the lockdown the test centre has moved to people's homes, Mithun had to do lug 30 kg of tech goodies to his flat, 3 floors above the ground. After the expedition, he explained, "it got me gasping for breath like an asthmatic geriatric with Covid-19." Digit has some traditions of its own. Any incomplete work is blamed on the last person who left, such as the lack of a database of what we have given in our DVDs over the years, an objective test process for audio products, or not uploading our old magazine articles on the interwebs. Another tradition is to refer to the last person to join as the noob till the next person joins, no matter how many years they are with us. So the noob, Dhriti, admitted that she barely knew the names of anyone beyond the edit team, and only recalled them by their faces. Hopefully there are no awkward run ins for her if and when the office opens up again. Dhriti is coming up with an objective test process for audio products though. Manish has not actually played Warframe in months, but was surprised at how much the game has grown when he saw a reddit post with a T-Rex built in the Dojo. Aditya unsuccessfully badgering people to play board games online. Spyfall and Horsepaste on Zoom are working out fine, but he is spending too much time on Werewolf Online. 🍀

If you are ever curious about what the Digit gang is up to, this is the place to get all the inside info. From the latest game we're obsessing about to the newest intern we're driving up the wall – it's all here folks.