

Easter eggs in gaming

Even games sneak in pop culture references and we have put together some of the best ones. <https://digit.in/jul20-39>

DCEU

These easter eggs from movies based on the DC universe are sure to give comic fans a geekgasm. <https://digit.in/jul20-40>

Easter eggs in geeky movies

The inspirations behind memorable scenes

Aditya Madanapalle | aditya@digit.in

T

o make your next watch more exciting, we have put together Easter eggs in movies popular among geeks.

These Easter eggs are also a great way to enhance the experience of anyone you are watching with. We have focused only on the most popular franchises, and only the ones that people like to rewatch repeatedly or get broadcasted multiple times. Unfortunately, this means that solitary movies such as Fight Club, which includes a Starbucks coffee in every scene gets left out. The Starbucks coffee cup is a deliberate inclusion in Fight Club, unlike the final season of Game of Thrones. For a series of Easter eggs that connect 20 geeky franchises together, check out the May 2020 Infoporn.

STAR WARS

George Lucas seems to be a big fan of Akira Kurosawa as a number of scenes from the Star Wars movies pay homage to Kurosawa films. In EPI the Trade Federation tanks comping over the horizon of the Windows XP wallpaper looks similar to Bandits appearing over the horizon in Seven Samurai. C3PO's line to R2D2 on the plight of droids from EPIV, "It seems we are made to suffer. It's our lot in life" is similar to what peasants say to themselves in Seven Samurai. Luke Skywalker is a moisture farmer who aspires to be a Jedi, just like Kikuchiyo is a farmer who aspires to be a samurai. Kambei in Seven Samurai scratches his head while thinking, which is something that Yoda does too.

The mustering of the Gungans before the attack on Theed is similar to Washizu returning to the castle in Throne of Blood. The chase sequence through the forests of Endor in EPVI is similar to a horseback chase sequence in Throne of Blood. Amidala following Obi Wan in EPI as a regular handmaiden to the queen is similar to Princess Yuki disguising herself as a peasant girl in The Hidden Fortress. Tahei and Matashichi from The Hidden Fortress are very similar to C3PO and R2D2, although the actual physical design of C3PO is modelled on a robot from another classic film, Metropolis. Anakin and Luke Skywalker have their arms cut off, and actually Anakin has all his limbs chopped off, which is a reference to Yojimbo. To hide the merchandise from robbers during shipping, the studio labelled the goods as "Red Harvest", which itself is a reference to the novel that Yojimbo is based on, "Blue Harvest". Sanjuro from the movie named after him hides in the floorboards of his house, just the way that Chewie, Han, Leia and Luke do in the Millennium Falcon, in EPIV. The sequence is repeated in the sequel trilogy too. Then, one of the most iconic scenes in the franchise, that of Luke Skywalker staring into the horizon at a binary pair of setting suns, is taken from a scene from Dersu Uzala, where Dersu and the Captain are staring at the Moon rising at the same time while the Sun is setting.

Rian Johnson continued the tradition of Kurosawa homages in Star Wars in Episode VIII. The story of what exactly happened between Luke Skywalker and Ben Solo is told in a series of flashbacks from the point of view of different characters, a narrative approach that is also used in Rashomon. Sanjuro's last line from Yojimbo, "Aba yo" translates to "see you around",