

DCEU canon

There are going to be two versions of Justice League after the Snyder Cut, and both of them can be canon! <https://digit.in/jul20-47>

Superman returns

A strong argument for why Henry Cavill must return as Superman for a DCEU post the Snyder Cut release. <https://digit.in/jul20-48>

The Battinson Haters

We don't have time for pseudoscience

Rahul Chettiyar | feedback@digit.in

In June 2019, director Matt Reeves went on a reveal spree for the official casting of his upcoming Batman film on Twitter. Amongst them was the revelation of who would be playing the protagonist, Batman/Bruce Wayne – Robert Pattinson. As soon as this happened, a huge majority of troglodytic fans flooded Twitter just to hate on Pattinson. They are miffed about Pattinson playing the role of the caped crusader. One of the few reasons they wanted him replaced was because Pattinson was not “buff enough” to play the role at the time. Some of them even went as far as begging for the movie to get cancelled just because Pattinson was in it. Well, thanks to those clowns' early Christmas requests, we are now facing a pandemic, which aided in the production of the film getting suspended, up until a while ago. Look, there is nothing wrong about wanting to see an accurate depiction of your favourite superhero on screen. Seeing an actor playing a character that you admire, getting replaced by someone else could be emotional. However, the issue here is that these clowns happen to have the stupidest reasons for this hatred. Before I begin with this rant, I would like to lay it out that Robert Pattinson is my favourite actor. However, I hope to convince you that my takes on this matter are unbiased and justified.

IGNORANCE

A lot of Robert Pattinson's criticism stems from just plain ignorance. A good majority of us know him as the guy who played Edward in the Twilight series and Cedric Diggory from the fourth Harry Potter movie. Doing huge projects as such does indeed translate to popularity. However, the Twilight movies also got branded as a cheesy romantic movie franchise for pre-teen girls. The name Twilight stuck with Pattinson, in a bad way. During the cast reveal for Batman, these clowns did not hold back and went straight for the jugular. From making memes about a sparkly Batman to calling him a bad actor just because he was in Twilight, it was an absolute disaster. I would not be surprised to know that these people never even saw Twilight in the first place. As cringy as the Twilight saga was, most of us can agree that Pattinson was the only bearable aspect of the series, all thanks to his acting chops.

After finishing his work on the Twilight movies, Pattinson went off the radar to do a whole bunch of independent films. All of which received rave reviews with Pattinson's performances being one of the main highlights. Since indie films don't get much coverage, it wasn't surprising that most people were in the dark about it. But the concern here is not the lack of knowledge. It is ignorance. These clowns choose to give their biased opinion on Pattinson while blatantly refusing to even watch or consider those indie films. People choose to ignore them and discredit his acting prowess based on his past. And this is exactly what grinds my gears since Robert Pattinson is, in fact, a terrific actor. If these clowns are going to mock him for his acting ability, they should also watch those indie films and give their genuine input.

I am not exaggerating when I say that Robert Pattinson is a freaking chameleon when it comes to acting! This guy adapts and camouflages into whatever role he is playing with ease and flair. His filmography is pretty absurd. He went from starring in David Cronenberg films to some post-apocalyptic and sci-fi films such as The Rover (2014) and High Life (2018) to even historical movies such as The King (2019). He played everything from the outcasts, the deranged, the broken and the average Joes to gradually evolve into one of the most interesting actors out there. In his 2017 thriller film Good Time, Pattinson gave his performance of a lifetime. He plays the role of Constantin Nikas, an ex-convict who is on a race against time in the streets of New York, to free his mentally challenged brother from prison. The film is an extremely intense and anxiety-inducing ride throughout and what aids it is Pattinson's incredible performance. From his physical aspects such as the dyed jet black hair, rough stubble and his newly learned Queens accent to his deranged psychopathic behavioural and mental aspects, his character is totally convincing. Hell, the guy even got nominated as the best

Robert Pattinson in a still from The Rover

Credit: The Rover, A24 Films