

preferred language. Next, choose the language of the person you're speaking with by doing the same on the bottom right of the screen.

Once you've chosen the languages both sides will converse in, simply hit the Auto button in the middle of the screen and both parties can start speaking in their respective languages. The app will listen to both sides and speak out the translation for the other person to listen and respond to. This allows for real-time conversations between two people speaking completely different languages. If the Auto mode is proving to be chaotic, you can converse manually by pressing the microphone button under your preferred language and then speaking. The app will translate what is spoken in a turn-by-turn manner.

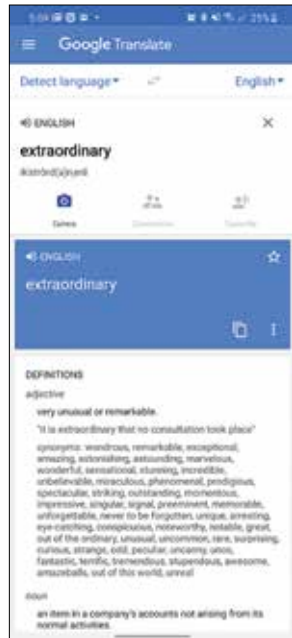

SAVE YOUR FAVOURITE WORDS AND PHRASES

If you're in a foreign country where you don't know the native language, you may find yourself having to translate a few words or sentences on a regular basis. It could be something as simple as asking for directions to the nearest train station every day or asking a restaurant attendant what is the best vegetarian dish option on their menu. Google Translate allows you to save these to a Phrasebook, that basically houses a collection of all your frequently-used phrases and their translations. All you need to do is tap the Star button next to the translation result and it will get added to your Phrasebook. To see all your saved entries, go to the hamburger menu on the left of the screen and click Phrasebook.

USE GOOGLE TRANSLATE AS A HANDY DICTIONARY

If you're very particular about the number of apps you have on your phone

Use Google Translate as a dictionary and don't like overcrowding, the Google Translate app can also double as a dictionary and thesaurus app on your phone. To get definitions and synonyms of words on Google Translate, select 'Detect Language' as the language you want to translate from and English as the language you want to translate to. Now, type any English word and hit the Translate (blue) button. You will now be able to see the meaning of the word you just typed, as well as a list of synonyms.

SHARE TRANSLATIONS

If you want to directly share a translation without having to copy and paste it into the app you want, you can tap the three-dot menu button on the bottom right side of the translation box and then select share. From here, you can easily share the translated text to any contact on WhatsApp, to your Google Notes, or even draft a new email.

USE CAMERA TO TRANSLATE SIGNS

One of the coolest features on Google Translate is the ability to point your phone's camera to say, a signboard in an unfamiliar language, and have it overlay the translation on the image in the viewfinder itself. For instance, you could look at a menu written in French through the Google Translate app's camera and it will overlay the translated words on top of the French words. You can also import an image you already have in your gallery and see the translation as an overlay on that image. With this feature, navigating areas such as train stations, roads, and museums in foreign countries becomes much easier.

TAP TO TRANSLATE

This is another nifty but relatively unknown feature on Google Translate. If you are often having to translate emails or messages constantly flipping over to the Translate app can be a pain. That's where Tap to Translate comes in handy. This feature enables a tiny pop up floating head, like the Facebook Messenger chat heads, on the side of your screen. With this feature enabled, you can simply select and copy any text and then tap on the floating button to immediately get the translation to your default language.

You can also tap 'New Translation' if you immediately want to translate something else without leaving the pop-up. Additionally, if you think the pop-up chat head-like bubble is slightly annoying to look at, you can simply swipe it away. The Tap to Translate option will still remain active in your notification bar. So, instead of tapping the floating bubble when you want to translate copied text, you will need to swipe down the notification bar and then click on Tap to Translate.
