REACJI

Reacji are emoji that you can use to react to a post or update, usually in a social media platform. While the feature is not new, the term for it is. In Facebook, the set of emoji are preset. Twitter or Instagram have just a single reacji for their posts, which is a heart. In some other places, the reacji is not preset, and users are free to react using any of the emoji available in Unicode, and in some cases, even non standard emoji. Slack was the first software to allow users to react to comments with any kind of emoji, and it is supported by many now. The option is also available on Discord. The latest platform that has introduced reacji, is Zoom. At times, this is also called reactji, with a t in it.

LOCKSTALGIA

While the Corona days don't seem to be getting over anytime soon, the people are limping back into offices (limping because of the long period of sedentary life has made some people forget how to walk). Masks and social distancing norms are being followed in the places where activity has picked up again. As the world opens up, people are already beginning to miss the forced staycation, or the coronacation that they had began to secretly enjoy. Those were the days of quiet streets, empty roads, and long days spent under the blankets without having to get out of your bed. Some are looking back at those days of intense lockdown or strict restrictions, and are missing it, a feeling that now has a word – lockstalgia. But humans may not be the only species experiencing lockstalgia. The world and the environment has enjoyed the anthropause – a sudden stop in human activity – for all too short a time, and the planet as well as the birds, butterflies and wildlife that had become bolder and were venturing deeper into cities will be returning to their forest refuges, and may be going through a lockstalgia of their own.

ANTI MASKER

Sure everybody enjoys an airgasm, which is that sudden feeling of pleasure you get when you finally remove a mask after a long period of wearing it. But to enjoy an airgasm you have to wear a mask in the first place, something that has become an irrational point of contention. An anti masker is a progression of the maskhole, who not only refuses to wear a mask themselves, but strongly urge others to stop wearing masks as well. These are really special kinds of covidiot who endanger others and themselves by going into the public, and then getting all vitriolic when confronted about their lack of a mask. What follows is a public meltdown, typically fuelled by profanity. These anti maskers have taken to social media to rant about how laws that forces you to wear masks infringes on personal freedoms, or how wearing masks has not been scientifically proven to be effective against the coronavirus anyway. Then there are some conspiracy theories that involve big pharma and how masks are basically a scam. Another reason is more mundane, people just don't like wearing them.
