The life of a writer isn't just about researching articles and dishing them out. Every now and then we wordsmiths have to work on scripting a video, shooting and editing it, the whole shebang. We do the odd unboxings and reviews on a regular basis but once in a blue moon, we end up taking on something much larger which deserves some special attention. This month it was Robert and Mithun's turn to work on such a project and boy did it wreck their schedules. Work began over a month ago and ended a little before the two could be free to work on the issue that you're reading right now. While Robert being in Australia couldn't be part of the video shoots, he took care of most of the scripting work. Mithun, on the other hand, had to fill in for the video shoots. Little did he know that he was working with folks who couldn't comprehend the complexity of the technical concepts in the script and ended up working double time with the videographers and the editors to get the shoots done. Robert claims that his Internet connection conked off mid-way during the project leaving Mithun in the lurch but we shall never know the truth. After a gruelling three weeks of 12-14 hour work-days, Mithun finally thought he'd get a day off to rest, unfortunately, issue closing began right after. He claims that he has spotted 14 grey hairs on his head thanks to this torturous video shoot.

The nightmares weren't reserved for just one. Dhriti tried shopping for a new desk on Amazon and ended up picking a nice cozy desk for her desktop. She ended up ditching the old desk a couple of days before the new one was delivered in hopes of switching without any hassle. Alas, the Amazon delivery guy had other plans. Apparently, there was some goof-up with the paper work and the Amazon guy brought the desk right to their doorstep and took it right back. The sheer frustration of literally seeing her new desk and having it taken away messed with Dhriti's mind. She's been plotting to mess up delivery persons who might take back stuff back without any proper reason. Last we heard, she was googling for booby traps and ordering a couple of things from a certain ACME Corporation...

While there has been practically no time for gaming this month, some of the folks did manage to squeeze a few minutes every day to get some much needed relaxation. Manish has been checking out Pummel Party, Path of Exile and a bit of Star Wars while Dhriti has been thinking of getting Among Us just so that she can get all the new memes coming out. Aditya has been playing Full Mojo Rampage, a rogue-like game set in a world with Voodoo magicks and what not. 🍀

QUOTE OF THE MONTH

"Paranoid Android is paranoid about others who are paranoid about becoming androids?"
