

Life-sized Stormbreaker

Hasbro has come out with a life-sized Stormbreaker Battle Axe inspired by the one wielded by Thor. <http://dgit.in/oct20-51>

BTS debuts video in Fortnite

BTS will be debuting a choreography video from their single Dynamite in Fortnite on 25 September. <http://dgit.in/oct20-52> for the bands that pay the influencers, as well as the make up artists and other support crew who find it hard to work through the pandemic. Staying holed up together has also helped accelerate the ideation and content creation process for the social media stars. For these social media stars who were successful enough to find quarantinemates and Hype Houses, the returns have been very rewarding, with a spike in the number of followers and views. Of course, the social media stars are the first to accept that the uptick in the engagement may just come down to more bored teenagers being holed up at home and nothing to do but wait for the influencers they follow to post the next bit of content.

CANZUK

In the UK, the unholy combination of Brexit and COVID-19 have resulted what is being called the Brovid, but there is hope on the horizon for a totally new form of economic and cultural community, one that is purely theoretical at this point but still has a dedicated Wikipedia page, called CANZUK. This is a hypothetical deal between Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom for economic integration, on the lines of the erstwhile European Economic Community, and become a new entity in international politics. While the underlying idea actually dates to the mid 60s, academics revived it after the referendum in 2016, when the citizens of the UK voted for leaving the EU. Critics point out that it may be very difficult to coordinate the efforts of any such union, over the geographical distance between the participating countries. These countries continue to enjoy extremely warm relations, with many organisations building bridges between them, even without the framework of a treaty in place. Over the past three years, there have been many posts on Reddit speculating on the various names for other countries deciding to leave the EU as well. Our favorites include Finish, Italeave, Espanope, Noland, AdiEU, enDE, and Oustria. As far as mutating geopolitical entities go, the best case scenario is if Estonian, Latvia, and Lithuania merged into Russia again, which would make it The Soviet Reunion.

Something is wrong with the numbers here, can you spot it?

NIGHTINGALE COURTS

Also happening in the UK, new temporary courts have been opened up to tackle the backlog of cases brought about during the pandemic. In March 2020, about half of the courts had closed down, and all trials involving a jury were put on hold, to prevent the virus from spreading further. Since then, the courts have been struggling to tackle the backlog of cases. The temporary courts settle civil and family disputes, as well as cases involving tribunals. This means that the other existing courts can go on to hear other cases.

RATIOD

This is a term that is emerging particularly on Twitter, and refers to a tweet that has far more comments than retweets or likes. Surely a large number of replies means great engagement right? Not really. Getting ratiiod does not have an absolute tipping point, but instead exists on a gradient. A tweet needs far more retweets and likes than replies, and counterintuitively this means that the more replies a tweet gets (without the corresponding likes and retweets), the worse its ratio is. This indicates that the twitterati absolutely hate the tweet, and that the OP dun goofed in some way, losing a ton of social karma in the process. Those who want to sabotage a tweet can get bot armies to spam the comment section of a tweet, to make it appear as if it has been ratiiod. If these comments get buried under an avalanche of even more hate and bile that the twittersphere is, then the malicious actors have been successful in ratioiding their target. 🚩

Unsolicited packets of seeds mailed from China

Credit: Washington State Department of Agriculture