

Paul Dano's greatest hits

Paul Dano getting beaten up in movies is a hilariously recurring trend. Pretty satisfying! <http://digit.in/nov20-37>

Analysing Fincher's directorial style

An analysis on Fincher's awe-inspiring techniques, including his iconic, bleak colour choices. <http://digit.in/nov20-38>

Mindbending Movies To Binge On Part - II

More psychological horror/thriller/drama films to binge-watch

Rahul Chettiyar | feedback@digit.in

At the dawn of the nationwide lockdown, we had recommended a number of psychological horror/thriller/drama films for you to binge-watch. At the time, we figured, the restrictions would ease down in a matter of months. So last time, we ended the list on a Christian Bale starring film surrounding insomnia - "The Machinist". Which was somewhat of a subliminal message to you guys, to get your sleep schedule in order. Not sure if you got that though. As it turns out, there does not seem to be an imminent end to the lockdown anytime soon. Meaning, you can still stay up late and watch a whole bunch of bizarrely thrilling movies. So, here are some more recommendations.

Note: Most of these movies are for adults only and are in no particular order.

PRISONERS (2013)

Directed by Denis Villeneuve, Prisoners is a high-tensional, psychological mystery-thriller, that could easily go down in history as a classic. The plot is primarily centred around a desperate father, who takes it upon himself to locate his missing daughter and her friend, following some police incompetence. This is one of those films, where the less you know, the better it gets. All we can tell you, is that it has got a highly suspenseful story that will keep you on the edge of your seats, deep symbolism, heavy plot twists that hit hard, cold-blooded imagery and some of the best performances ever witnessed, all thanks to the ensemble cast. Also, if you are one of those people who loves seeing Paul Dano getting beaten the crap out of, this film is the perfect one for you!

I'M THINKING OF ENDING THINGS (2020)

Directed by Charlie Kauffman, I'm thinking of ending things is a psychological drama film that revolves around a young woman, who goes on a road trip with her new boyfriend to a secluded farm. Upon arrival, she is faced with a bunch of unpleasant and scary circumstances. Just so you know, this film is not an easy watch, and is riddled with tons of intricate details. So, it demands your utmost attention, in order to fully grasp the idea. As with most other Kauffman films, this one is also subjected to philosophical ideas, long poetic or metaphorical dialogues and a depressing plot, that will make you contemplate about it long after.

ZODIAC (2007)

Based on real-life events, David Fincher's Zodiac dramatically chronicles the emergence and the investigative process, on a serial killer that terrorized the streets of San Francisco Bay Area, during the late 1960s to early 1970s. Still remaining unsolved to this day, the killer's modus operandi involved sending encrypted, taunting letters to the press and the police, prior or after his deeds. The film does a fantastic job of keeping the events authentic and unsettling, which is further elevated by Fincher's iconic yellow-tinted visual palette. Although the film might seem slow in certain areas, it is with good reason, as it makes the impending doom all the more worthwhile.

MOTHER! (2017)

Darren Aronofsky's mother! is simply put, a strange, "experience" film, that presents itself as a fever dream or a never-ending nightmare. Without spoiling too much, it follows the story of a married woman (Mother) living in an ideal paradise with her husband. That is, until one late night, when an unwelcomed stranger pays them a visit, disrupting the peace. This film is a total chaos simulator, where the events just keep getting crazier as time passes by, forcing your anxiety to shoot up to the roof. Although