

Brazil COVID-19 data leak

A medical data breach exposed personal data of millions of Brazilian COVID-19 patients. <https://digit.in/dec20-81>

Make Amazon Pay

A group of activists are protesting against Amazon by launching an online campaign. <https://digit.in/dec20-82>

BUTTERFLIES of INDIA

Identify the species
the next time you see one of these flutter by

Aditya Madanapalle |
aditya@digit.in

Scientific name: Atrophaneura varuna

Common name: Common batwing

Where to find: The Himalayas, North East India

The wings are rich and velvety, and the butterflies' stink giving off a strong, musky odour. Combined with the dark colours you are likely to smell it before you see it.

Image Credit: Uajit

Scientific name: Papilio machaon

Common name: Common yellow swallowtail

Where to find: The Himalayas, North East India

This is a stunning and beautiful species with the wings appearing to be cut evenly down the middle. The caterpillar stage of the butterfly camouflages itself by appearing to be bird dropping.

Credit: Entomolo

Scientific name: Tirumala limniace

Common name: Blue Tiger

Where to find: South India

The caterpillars tend to prefer particular species of plants, and while the adults accumulate around biological matter like flies. The butterflies migrate extensively during the rainy season.

Credit: Charles J Sharp

Scientific name: Euploea core

Common name: Common Crow

Where to find: All over India

This is one of the most common kinds of butterflies, because it has toxins in its wings that make it inedible. A number of other butterflies try to mimic its appearance to escape predators.