digit diary

The Digit Team is bombarded with buying advice on Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, Instagram, Telegram, Discord, WhatsApp, Signal and email. All the best buying advice that we can give is in the annual Zero1 awards, which is the result of the testing we have done throughout the year.

This is why the November month is one of the busiest of the year, and we apologise again for the delay. One of the things that the edit team has to do at the beginning of the year is decide the Zero1 categories, but we have been getting demands all year for categories of products we do not test. The team may be asked to pick the best pulse oximeter available, or the best LED strip, or the best water level alarm, the best background screen stand, and the best hair trimmers. This last category was in such high demand that the team actually ordered a bunch of trimmers and carried out tests.

In fact, Robert went on to write a detailed guide on all the trimmers and shavers in the market, along with their various accessories and attachments.

The trimmers did not impress Manish who is growing a magnificent beard, staying six feet away from all sharp edges. Manish has mostly been playing Assassin's Creed Valhalla, Baldur's Gate 3 and a LOT of Star Wars: the Old Republic of late, the last of which he did not play when it originally came out. He's also been seen venturing back to Minecraft every now and then.

QUOTE OF THE MONTH

Dhriti responded to the prospects of new product categories rather overenthusiastically by posting bitmoji in the office chat, and no one knew where that came from. Apparently it was a "typo".

Mithun spent most of the month on the phone, coordinating the Zero1 awards and going through four hours of conference calls every day. Towards the end of the month, he started complaining about his ears hurting. The team has been unable to identify mysterious heavy breathing noises in our video conferences, when we found out that it was the exhausted Mithun.

Aditya decided to revisit an old MMO, Star Legends, and you can read what he discovered in the first physical Skoar! In a long time.
