One of the microentrepreneurs with THC

sent, they have a presence in five Himalayan villages. As the Little Green World representative explains, it is all about being focused on the important things "the entire education system is built to enable children to think critically and be problem solvers. Though the present education system has become all about memorizing authoritative textbooks to reproducing the same in exams to get good grades. Environmental education will serve as the lever for this paradigm shift, it will instead focus on learning, on building capacity for critical thinking and problem-solving. Environment education will replace sectoral thinking with multidisciplinary thinking. Global warming and climate change are the harsh reality of today and teaching this to the students in their early are one of the most important things."

The concept of a Little Green World is further explained, "Little Green World is a training and consultancy firm, that aims at consulting organizations and institutes to live in harmony with nature and empower them to create their own Little Green World. We envision enabling each individual to become a conservationist and a zero-waste practitioner."

Practically, this means that the schools typically have facilities for waste segregation and composting. There is an activity space where making and hacking is encouraged, and where things are upcycled. As a planned activity the school children are made to spend "a day in a life of waste worker", which can be a sweeper, a garbage truck driver or a person working at a recycling center. Solar panels are installed for electricity generation. The canteen offers freshly cooked food, fresh fruits and fruit juices, with nothing being available in packages. If it makes sense, water engineering solutions are deployed too.

We then asked about the role of environmentalism in the mountains, "Metro cities and the other states have several organizations and environmentalists working on this cause. Compared to the cities, very few organizations and experts work in the Himalayan region. The Himalayan region needs its due attention and works on the ground as it is one of the places that is directly hit by the global phenomenon such as global warming and climate change in the forms of flash floods, glacier melt, rise in temperature to name a few."

THE BLANK COLLECTIVE IS ABOUT BOUQUET TOURISM

This is an innovative tourist company that designs experiences instead of just sightseeing tours, and innovatively tries to use tourism as a means of preserving and reviving traditional art forms in the region. The tourists can get to work directly with the local artisans, learning how to make the things they would otherwise have purchased from a handicraft shop. Additionally, the tourists are exposed to local traditions and customs, as well as authentic local food. They explain their work as, "A travel venture which merges responsible tourism with learning indigenous art forms of India. We aim to fill the market gap for customers who are looking for offbeat experiences and opportunities to learn various artforms, enhancing sources of income for local stakeholders, and preserving artforms by facilitating learning." We asked what goes into crafting an experience. "Curating an event begins with secondary research about the region, artforms, cultural practises and possible collaborators. This process is followed by physical visits and primary research. During this period The Blank Collective reaches out to the prospective artist or collaborator and lives with them (or in their vicinity) for a period of time. This stay includes engaging with the artform and building an achievable module. In tandem, cultural elements like cuisine, rituals and practices are identified. To complete the itinerary, through word of mouth of locals and self discovery exploration of offbeat locations is planned."

For each event, The Blank Collective partners with local artists, homestay owners, eateries, guides and travel partners, and they plan to organise up to three events every month.
