

Speedrunning on a Hot Plate

You can cause a bug in Dragon Quest III saves by increasing the cartridge's temperature; start at level 99. <http://dgit.in/jan21-97>

Sardonicast

Check out this bi-weekly film podcast, hosted by YMS (Adum), Ralph the Movie Maker and I Hate Everything. <http://dgit.in/jan21-98>

↑ The Japanese of course have a name for the art of carving fruit, called mukimono. Shown here is an example of carved broccoli from instagram user gakugakugakugaku1.

↑ Closer back home traditional artists from India make and sell carvings into dry coconuts. These typically have a religious significance but may depict nature or everyday scenes as well.

← Papaya a favorite delicacy among the people of Thailand is sometime carved up in elaborate ways, featuring flowers and dragons, before being eaten in a communal setting.

← Carving-nations on Deviantart sculpted this incredibly detailed dragon using a humble watermelon. This one in particular looks too good to be eaten.

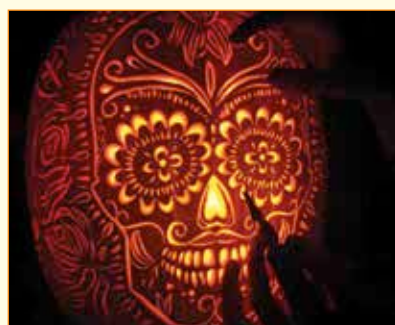

← The sweet potato is another example of a vegetable that is particularly suitable for making sculptures. The blogger Pear Mama carved out this skull from a sweet potato.

← This is an example of a parrot made out of pineapple. Even the bowl in which the chopped up pineapple is served, is itself carved out of a pineapple!

← Steve DuBridge has made a career out of carving sweet potatoes, and crafts them into interesting portraits. He has written the book on the subject, called Twisted Taters.

← Of course the Pumpkin simply had to be invented, and the halloween tradition means that people compete to make interesting and intricate pumpkin carvings every year.