WHAT'S NEW

Netflix dethroned by Disney+

Netflix has officially been dethroned by Disney+ as the latter claims the number one spot on the Nielsen Top 10 Streaming Programs with The Mandalorian. The wildly popular show captured the hearts of many Star Wars, and even non Star Wars fans with its fantastic space adventures, amazing action sequences, and who can forget... Grogu, aka Baby Yoda. The second season saw the return of beloved characters from the first season, brought back fan favourites from the films, introduced some new characters in the live-action format, and even brought back some characters believed dead. It's no surprise that the show captured viewers' attention and snagged the coveted top spot in the Nielsen streaming chart, beating out favourites such as The Office, The Crown, and others. This is the first Disney+ show and the first non-Netflix show to claim the number one spot in this list. With new shows such as WandaVision and upcoming Marvel shows on Disney+, we wouldn't be surprised to see Disney+ claim the top spot more often from now on.

A Harry Potter live-action series is reportedly in the works

A Harry Potter live-action TV series is reportedly in early development at HBO Max. Executives at the Warner-Media-backed streamer have allegedly engaged in conversations with potential writers, exploring ideas that would bring the much-loved franchise to television. However, what the series will entail is still unknown as these meetings are supposedly still in the initial stages. No writers or actors are currently connected to the project. This development, however, should come as no surprise since Harry Potter remains one of Warner's most valuable pieces of IP. It's yet to be seen though how Rowling's less-than-ideal image in public due to her comments and views about the transgender community affect the popularity of the possible live-action series. Nevertheless, so far, both HBO Max and Warner Bros. have denied talks of an adaptation stating, "There are no Harry Potter series in development at the studio or on the streaming platform".
