GEEK-KEY

Georg Luger (1849-1923)

Georg Luger introduced the new parabellum cartridge that allowed for an automatic pistol with a smaller and more angled grip. It was its use as the standard German military pistol from 1908 to 1938 that made it the iconic weapon it is today, although the Swiss Army were the first to use it. Allied soldiers would stumble Luger pistols, which were actually kept there to set off booby traps. The Luger pistols are expensive collectibles today.

Carl Walther (1858-1915)

The first Walther PP was introduced in 1931, the first double action semiautomatic pistol. It was designed for use for police forces, and continues to be manufactured and used till this day. The pistols can fire 8 to 10 rounds, are discrete and easy to conceal, making them particularly suitable for undercover cops... and spies. James Bond has used the weapon in both Dr No and Goldeneye. Adolf Hitler used this weapon to commit suicide.

John Browning (1855-1926)

Browning was a gunsmith who made many innovative gun designs but none of them are comparable to the impact of the Colt-Browning M1895, which is known as the potato digger, as the gun could dig into the ground when fired continuously, if it was not cleared above the ground with a tripod. The weapon proved to be suitably destructive for use by the armies of various countries during the first half of the twentieth century.

Mikhail Kalashnikov (1919-2013)

The Automat Kalashnikova 1947, was developed in secret by the Soviet Military, a rugged, simple to produce automatic rifle that is light and easy to carry. In 1949, the Soviet Army began to use it, and the weapon found widespread use after the Warsaw Pact. Insurgent groups, militants and revolutionary groups prefer this weapon, especially for use in guerilla warfare. It is responsible for millions of deaths, far more than the atom bombs.

AK-47

Uziel Gal (1923-2002)

Developed specifically for the Arab-Israeli war of 1948, the Uzi is a compact submachine gun that is easy to load, and accurate during automatic fire. The biggest feature of the weapon is the firepower it offers for its compactness. Mini and micro variants are used by specialised police forces and elite military units. The design is enhanced in modern times with better materials. The versatile weapon can be fired from the hip, with the stock braced against the shoulder, or with stock under shoulder.
