

Signature Altwork Station

Working from home is the norm, and well, what's more comfortable than working from home? As it turns out, working from home might not actually be the most comfortable thing. Offices are equipped with proper desks and seating arrangements, which aren't usually available in everyone's homes. Then again, if what we're going to be looking at is the solution, it's not very cheap. At $7650, California-based Sonoma has created the Signature Altwork Station, a workstation that's designed to be as ergonomic and versatile as possible.

The Altwork features up to 180-degrees of position adjustment, so you could pretty much lie flat while using this workstation. Of course, your worktable comes equipped with a magnetic keyboard-and-mouse setup, you know, for when you're attempting to defy gravity while you're working. The stand on the side is also where you mount the monitor. Securely we hope, or it'll fall right on your face. The Signature is capable of remembering up to four of your favourite positions. If you're looking to boost your productivity, while being the most comfortable you possibly can, then you might want to look into investing that $7.5K in the Altwork.

Caviar AirPods Max

Russian luxury brand Caviar is known for making absurdly expensive products, even more expensive. Their next venture is Apple's AirPods Max over-ear headphones. What they've got on offer is a "solid gold" version of the AirPods Max. Yes, solid gold. Priced at $108,000, Caviar basically said NO to aluminum earcups and switched them out for pure gold. If that wasn't enough, they're getting rid of the mesh headband, and instead using crocodile leather. They're making both white and black iterations of these bands. At the base of the headband on either side, you've got gold accents, which lead to the golden earcups. The AirPods Max earcups normally don't have a logo on them, but the Caviar AirPods Max will feature Caviar's logo on each side. Additionally, these headphones are as exclusive as exclusive gets. Caviar is making only a single piece available worldwide.
