

Lady Gaga's Bulldogs

The singer-songwriter's bulldogs recover safely after her dog walker was shot.
<http://dgit.in/mar21-81>

Spider-Man: No Way Home

The movie is contractually Tom Holland's last spidey movie.
<http://dgit.in/mar21-82>

SARDONICAST

The Sardonicast is a bi-weekly film podcast hosted by three popular YouTube movie critics – Adam Johnston (YMS), Ralph Sepe (ralphthemovie-maker), and Alex Beltman (IHE). Every fortnight, they come together and talk about the latest films they've seen, giving honest and conflicting opinions that are sure to keep you engaged. They also hold discussions for the awards season, latest film news, and sometimes delve into other pop culture subjects as well. Adding onto it is their cynical personas, making witty and sarcastic remarks at every turn of an argument. At the end of every podcast, they answer film-related questions from fans and give out older movie recommendations for everyone to watch and discuss in the next episode. At times, they also invite some special guests over, which could range from other YouTube movie reviewers to straight-up personalities from within the film industry. Notable ones include David F Sandberg, the director of Shazam! (2019), and Jared Gilman, star of Moonrise Kingdom (2012). From numerous inside jokes to running gags, it's an all-round fun place to be if you love movies and want to learn more about them through a much-casual approach! You can listen to the Sardonicast on YouTube, Spotify, Apple Podcasts and Google Podcasts. As an added bonus, if you go check out their individual channels, you'll be greeted with even more film-based content.

NO FILM SCHOOL

No Film School is the leading educational website for filmmakers, by filmmakers. Created by Ryan Koo, the idea behind the blog is that you don't need to go to film school in order to make great movies – "no film school required!" And it does serve its purpose by being the prime hotspot of information for any up and coming filmmakers out there. It's got everything, from the latest tutorials to interviews to short films to even gear news. They also provide helpful tips on better screenwriting, editing, lighting, colour,... the list goes on. While scrolling through the website, you might notice that some of their content is picked straight from other YouTube channels. And although it might set some people off, we would like to make the argument that a lot of these videos would be difficult to come by if you were to search for them manually. But through No Film School, you get this collection of hidden gems, all in one place, while the YouTubers themselves garner a fair amount of views. In addition, the site also has a community feature where users can create their own profiles, link their work, and find and interact with other members. It also features a forum board, where people can bring up film-related issues, ask questions, or start intriguing discussions without any judgement whatsoever.

SHORT OF THE WEEK

A go-to solution for most filmmakers at the early stages of their career is to make short films. Movies that are extremely low budget, oftentimes artsy, and overall require less time and attention span to watch. It goes without saying that the best way to learn about movies is by simply watching them. And that short films, in general, are pretty obscure and difficult to find. Thankfully, Short of the Week happens to be one of the leading websites that hosts a diverse catalogue of short films on their platform. This collection includes a wide variety of genres, such as action, drama, animation, horror, and even a set of award-winning short movies. And is a great way to get introduced to emerging filmmakers and actors from around the world. All for free! Furthermore, you can put your own name on the map as well by submitting short films that you created, at a price of $29. Following a healthy analysis of your craft, some of the selected films are then uploaded onto their YouTube channel too, where you could see how much traction it's gaining. There are no language constraints either, as long as you integrate English subtitles into your work. Short movies are a great medium for telling quality constrained stories and establishing your set style at the initial stages of your filmmaking career. Other times, they can serve as concept pieces for a full-length feature, waiting to get noticed and funded by bigger studios. Some great examples of this are Thunder Road (2016, 2018) by Jim Cummings and Lights Out (2013, 2016) by David F Sandberg. 