

$220,000 Charizard

Logic, the rapper, wins online bid for extremely rare Charizard Pokemon card. <http://digit.in/mar21-85>

60-Foot Gundam

A 60-foot Gundam model has now entered its testing phase. <http://digit.in/mar21-86>

Daredevil: Loud Sounds

Matt Murdok's loss of his vision took away the natural gift of eyesight and was replaced with echolocation, a radar sense that allows him to image his surroundings based on sound. However, by the same power, he also becomes vulnerable, and extremely sensitive towards unexpected loud noises. Daredevil could go toe-to-toe with anyone but he will get absolutely crushed in the face of a large bomb, or a cacophony of supersonic sounds, so much so that the repeated reverberations of high-pitched sounds render him unconscious. In Daredevil Vol. 2: West-Case Scenario, the superhero is subjected to a 120dB ultrasound by the Purple Man who knows that his weapon is "excruciating for a man" with Daredevil's gifts.

Superman: Pink Kryptonite

Superman doesn't have many weaknesses, but the ones that he does have are lethal. His infamous weakness against kryptonite, radioactive rocks from his home planet, is well-known of. However there are more types of kryptonite. Unlike the green variety, the pink kryptonite is one of the worst for him. The rock has the ability to make the Man of Steel flamboyant. In Supergirl Vol.4 #79, Superman becomes particularly flamboyant in an alternate Earth One timeline where after getting exposed to pink kryptonite he becomes shockingly excited about Jimmy Olsen's clothing. In his own words, "Did I ever tell you how smashing you look in bowties, Jimmy?"

This is quite weird, and arbitrary.

Martian Manhunter: Matches

Despite being one of the most powerful, and fearsome superheroes in the galaxy, Martian Manhunter has a particular weakness against flames.

Flames, even the size of a match or a lighter, are more than enough to humble the man. In addition to scalding his exterior, it disorients his most prized weapon - his mind. His fear of fire is very intense, and in fact, when he is exposed to flames he has the capacity to consider self-destructing. The reason for this is the pre-existing pyrophobia that all of Martian Manhunter and his ilk face due to the conflagrations caused by the vile aliens the "Burning" to impose themselves on their species.

The Flash: Excessive Speed

Who would've thought that the Flash's glaring weakness is speed itself? Barry Allen's death, when he sacrificed himself by running to the point of dissolution in his fight against Anti-Monitor was dramatic and made even the toughest of fans grieve. While most readers were too absorbed by his shocking death, it wasn't as apparent to notice his weakness. His devastating and heroic death was ranked among the most important deaths in comic history. In essence, The Flash ran so fast, that he atomized himself. The sad part is that he was unaware of this himself. None of his mentors warned him that speed would be his Achilles heel, leaving such an important realisation to the heat of a battle.

