Hello Sir,

Read the "WFH Woes". I thought only I suffered from WFH problems. The worst is zero exercise. Before Lock-down and WFH, I weighed around 80 Kgs. Now after a year, with no exercise, constant snacking I have crossed a CENTURY. I weigh a TON now.

I am here writing you the mail, after reading your editorial while laying on the couch, because I pulled back muscle while lifting a 5 kg rice bag.

Hi Robert. I have to say I was quite surprised after reading your April column. I didn't expect you to suffer from WFH problems too. I'd figured you of all people would have figured it out.

Maybe this article might help:
<https://lifemathmoney.com/work-from-home-7-tips-to-increase-productivity/>

Other than that maybe a way to eat less junk would be to not have it at the home at all? (Seriously if eating junk food is bad why even have it in the home at the first place?)

And no you aren't an evil and uncaring person for not liking being disturbed. When working at a hard problem is quite common to need like a few minutes to even a hour to get into the groove of the stuff. To, essentially, load the problem into your RAM. And as you might already know, we humans have very bad RAM tech. Worse than monkeys infact.

But don't take me too seriously. There are people who have accomplished much by working in short bursts too. I think they do so by working on their problems subconsciously while they are doing all sorts of chores.

Anyway, I hope I've been helpful. Take care, bye.

digit diary

If you are ever curious about what the Digit gang is up to, this is the place to get all the inside info. From the latest game we're obsessing about to the newest intern we're driving up the wall – it's all here folks.

"Records were meant to be broken." This adage has remained true since the first naked Greek athlete competing at the Sanctuary of Zeus managed to fling a discus a mere two meters away from where he stood to set the first ever record for longest discus throw at the Ancient Olympic Games. Centuries later, we at Digit were inspired to pull off something similar. The pandemic has forced us to set the record for the latest closing ever. Of course, close to 70 per cent of our editorial staff were out of action so it's not like we had much choice. It's a record nonetheless.

Aside from the intermittent hospitalisations, our writers have still managed to play a few games. Manish is getting back into LoL and Dhriti has been crushing enemy bases in Clash of Clans after a three-year break. Adi is back into Warframe and Mithun has been playing all sorts of games for about five minutes each. Why five minutes? Because that's how long most game benchmarks last.

There's also been a growing interest in Cryptocurrencies and NFTs. Aditya's been digging into NFTs while Mithun is sheepishly dipping a few bucks into Doge hoping that Elon will bless it all the way to the moon.

All these serve as mere distractions.

The June 20th Anniversary issue is a rather colossal one and everyone's sweating buckets knowing how ridiculous it is going to be for all of us over the next couple of weeks. So we'll get back to work and we're hoping that you're all staying indoors and playing it safe.
