Domino's India hacked

A cyber security researcher has claimed that the credit card details of nearly 10 lakh Domino's Pizza India customers has been reportedly sold on the dark web for a whopping ₹4 crores. Alon Gal, CTO at security firm Hudson Rock claims that the hacked Domino's India database had 13TB's worth of data. According to Gal, the hackers are looking for $550,000 (₹4 crores) for the database and plan on building a search portal to query the data. In a tweet, Gal claimed that "the information includes 180,000,000 order details containing names, phone numbers, emails, addresses, payment details and a whopping 1,000,000 credit cards."

Microsoft Whiteboard

Microsoft Whiteboard is a free app that's available for both iOS and Android, and basically functions like the name suggests, as a whiteboard. The current situation being as it is, work from home and school from home has become the norm. Being able to bring the trusty whiteboard into our homes is one step towards achieving some sort of normalcy in our lives. Of course, being an app means that this digital whiteboard is far more capable than the real deal, even if they don't quite feel the same. The whiteboards you create can be a collaboration between a group of people, maybe a class or a work group, or it can even be your own personal space to keep notes. The app is free to download and you only need a free Microsoft account in order to use it. Once you have the app and are getting started on your own whiteboard, you will find a bunch of tools, from a variety of ink tools, to editing tools like erasers and lassos, and of course, a ruler which you can set at any angle. You can also just undo, redo etc. Much like paint, you can choose the width and colour for your ink tool of choice, and your preferences are saved across whatever whiteboard you're on. Just the basics of Microsoft Whiteboard offer a lot, you can add images, posts and documents, the user experience is smooth, and it really is the closest we've seen an app come to simulating an actual Whiteboard.
