Ilvermorny

Ilvermorny is the primary American magic school, with four houses much like Hogwarts. It began as a small home school and expanded organically as it attracted more students. Many of the main characters in Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them were educated here, but fans wanting to dive into the rich backstory of this school can consume a whole ton of additional interactive content over at Rowling's website, Pottermore.

King's Dominion Atelier of the Deadly Arts

This is a long running institution that has been around for over four centuries, and is dedicated to training the kids from all of the most dangerous crime families in the world. The school is highly disciplined and ordered, with students getting instructed in mixed martial arts, poisons, assassination, and psychology, curriculum specifically chosen to create some of the most dreaded criminals in the world. Find out more in the Deadly Class comics and TV show.

Belgrave University

Spread out over a 500 acre campus, the Belgrave University caters to the rich and elite, the magic is in the secret societies within the universities, but there are restricted woods around the campus. This is a woke university and new students get a welcome kit with a rape whistle and the "how not to rape" pamphlet, and a map to binary as well as non binary restrooms on the campus.

University of Salamanca

The 1926 novel, The Charwoman's Shadow contains the University of Salamanca's faculty of magic in action, which is a relatively strange novel that was fantasy before Tolkien, which makes it a genre of its own really.

Roanoke Academy for the Sorcerous Arts

This is a magical school that is contemporary in its appearance but classical in its academics (students study Boethius, Kepler, Aristotle, Pythagoras, Plato and Pliny). One of the great things about the campus is that it was designed by Leonardo da Vinci.
