Hogwarts

Probably the most famous magic school of them all; it is the location of most of the action in all the Harry Potter books as well as the movies. The school has multiple towers and dungeons, houses four houses full of students. By creating the magical world around Hogwarts, Rowling added a fantasy element to an established genre of literature for young adults known as the school story, which was particularly popular in the first half of the twentieth century.

Luna Nova Magical Academy

Little Witch Academia is a Japanese Anime where the titular institution is the Luna Nova Magical Academy, which is located on one of the ley lines in Southern England, and is one of the most prominent magical schools in all of Europe. In Potteresque terms, the whole school is dealing with going from admitting only purebloods into letting mudbloods in, and the story is told from the perspective of one of these new recruits. Fans can also read up on the manga.

THE BUREAU OF MAGICAL THINGS

The Bureau of Magical Things

While The Bureau of Magical Things itself is not a school or university, it is what a group of students of Professor Maxwell of the Department of Magical Intervention, call themselves. This series is another woke fantasy series with a diverse cast, and the best thing is that we actually get to see the black Hermione in action, who is incredibly kickass and smart. The TV show has short episodes and just one season, but the next one is around the corner.

Scholomance

The Cave at Salamanca is not the only place where the Devil is the visiting faculty, and his main gig is actually over at Scholomance. This is possibly the most ancient and well known of all magical schools, and is appropriately located in Transylvania. Ten students at a time were enrolled in the school, where students were taught everything from how to talk to animals, ride dragons and cast spells. The price was steep, least of which was having to spend the entire 7 year course underground.
