OVER THE LAST FEW YEARS, TWITTER HAS BEEN THE BIGGEST OPINION DRIVER ON THE INTERNET ALL OVER THE world. With the pandemic coming along to shift everything over to the internet, there are a host of services and apps that have come up aimed at making user experience better when on their internet-enabled systems.

New avenues like online journalism and research have given rise to two services that have become the staple of professionals and amateurs alike. They are TweetDeck and Bear. TweetDeck is a tool that helps users get the most out of Twitter and Bear is a note-taking app unlike any other on the Apple app store for all its devices. Both these tools, despite being extremely popular, have certain hidden features and tricks, which, if used correctly, can make the lives of their users way easier. So here we bring you meticulously selected tips, tricks and features that will make your Twitter navigation and note taking easier and faster.

TWEETDECK

Navigating through a platform like Twitter, with literally has millions of users writing their two cents in the microblogs, can become a really challenging task. The tool called TweetDeck, developed by Twitter itself, enables users to get the most out of the platform.

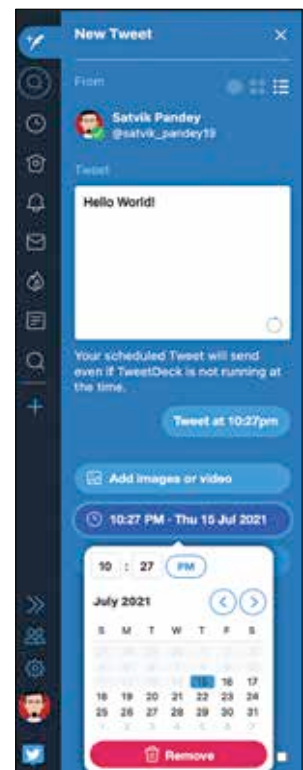

SCHEDULE YOUR TWEETS

TweetDeck, allows the users to schedule their Tweets so that their microblogs can be posted on the specified time, while they focus on their next big task. The process is pretty simple and straightforward.

All you need to do is open TweetDeck, and head over to the top left corner of the window (if you are a desktop user) and click on the compose Tweet option. Write down whatever you want to Tweet, add the links/images/videos to the Tweet. Then instead of clicking the Tweet button right away, go to the Schedule Tweet option that is listed below. Once there, click the icon and then select the date and time at which you want to send/publish the Tweet. After you have made the selections, you will see that

You can set your schedule to the minute
