Scarlett Johansson sues over Black Widow's Disney+ release

Scarlett Johansson, best known for her role as Black Widow/Natasha Romanoff in the MCU, has filed a lawsuit against Disney for a breach in her contract. Johansson claims that her contract was effectively breached when Disney released the standalone Black Widow film on its Disney+ streaming platform at the same time as its theatrical release. Allegedly, Johansson had agreed that her salary for the film would be largely based on the movie's box office performance. "Disney intentionally induced Marvel's breach of the agreement, without justification, in order to prevent Ms. Johansson from realising the full benefit of her bargain with Marvel", the suit said. A Disney spokesperson called Johansson's suit "especially sad and distressing in its callous disregard for the horrific and prolonged global effects of the COVID-19 pandemic". <https://dgit.in/johanssonsuesdisney>

China has made a PUBG inspired movie

A newly-announced action film releasing in China this August features a game that seems a lot like PUBG. The storyline focuses on an esports streamer that's down on his luck. Titled Biubiubiu, the film is selling itself as the first esports battle royale film. However, this is not the first time films or drama series coming out of China have covered a storyline about esports. In the upcoming film's trailer, you can see that the movie relies on live-action sequences for depicting the gameplay happening during esports tournaments. They've gone down the live-action route instead of using CGI animation or in-game machinima. The game depicted in the trailer looks a lot like PUBG, which isn't surprising considering how popular the game is in China. However, this isn't an official tie-in with PUBG or China's Peacekeeper Elite. Yet, based on the film's poster, one would be remiss to think that it's not taken inspiration from the popular battle royale game. Biubiubiu is releasing exclusively in China on 6 August. <https://dgit.in/pubgmovie>
