Why An Anime-List?

Keep track of your anime series

Nayan Panda | feedback@digit.in

Whether you are a veteran in the lands of Anime or someone who just set their foot on this soil, creating and maintaining an anime list is never a bad idea. MyAnimeList comes as no surprise when virtual anime lists are concerned. First, let's take a look at the more cardinal aspect of "why" you should maintain an anime list.

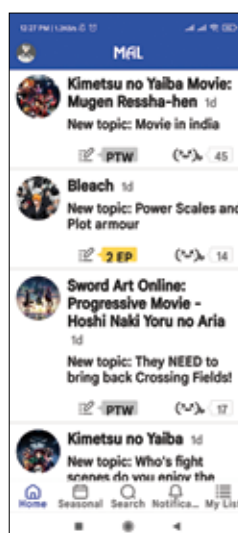

As a weeb or otaku it is handy to keep a track of your favourite or "seen" anime series in a more organised way. We are talking of dozens of personalised records with everything from your personal rating for the show to tracking their updates in real time.

MAL allows you to look through the vast database to keep track of the anime and manga you've seen and read, and can be handy when trying to recall or recommend a show to someone. Apart from this, you get more personalised anime or manga recommendations, reviews, and suggestions. You can also be a part of their official forums, where you can discuss the series! They allow you to set up milestones, and even go through your friend's stats and score for their own list, which is just great for sharing your treasured list (flexing was never easier). MAL also works as IMDB for Japanese voice actors and anime/manga staff, in case you are one of the deep divers :p

Moving to their official Android app, anyone familiar with their official website will immediately find themselves at home. Other than the easy-to-understand UI, the app is more like a web-interface with discrete tabs/sections for going through new topics and announcements, seasonal updates on shows, searching any particular anime or even revising your own list.

Official discussions and announcements regarding anime shows/series you follow, are served right on your home screen and you can delve deeper into any discussion from the app itself. The seasonal dashboard takes you to top latest aired, airing or to-be-aired shows along with their ratings and respective to the seasons, with the past entries (older than a season), can be accessed from the archived section. The manual search lets you hunt the broad database to find a particular show and its details, from which you can also label, score and add the show to your own list. You can also get new recommendations based on which show is blowing up currently to shows which are most anticipated for release. If there are any new updates, like a new anime being appended to the database, it shows up at the notification section. Lastly there's the pivotal "My List" section which does what it says by maintaining your list and is divided into subsections of "Watching", "Completed", "On-Hold", "Dropped", "Plan to Watch" and "All". While adding a new entry to your list, you can put any of the above mentioned status label and MAL will auto-sort it into its corresponding list, which is super handy when you feel like going through your AnimeList for a specific reason (let's say to look for the pending anime in your to-watch list). There's a switch on top right to toggle between your list for anime and Mangas too!

Well that's that for your personal Anime list, fellow weeb. Oyasuminasai! u.u

NOTE: MyAnimeList is just the official app for the MyAnimeList database and community and NOT an Anime streaming application.
